OCTOBER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

There's a golden haze of Autumn
Resting on the field and meadow,
And the frondage of the woodland
Lieth half within the shadow;
And the sombre brown tints gather
Dark and strangely sad and sober,
While the sere leaves sigh and rustle
To the footsteps of October.

Down the glades the voice of Summer
Lingers still in tones of sweetness,
Though its heat has passed to rhenness,
And its promise to completeness;
And where late the voice of nature
Echoed to the wild bee's humming,
You can hear the squirrel chirping,
And the wary partridge drumming.

On the trees the nuts are browning,
And the boughs are overladen
With the burrs the frost shall open
For the happy lad and maiden;
And the forest aisles shall answer
To the sweet, glad voice of childhood—
Happiest music ever echoed
In the home, or heart, or wildwood.

Still the earth seems somewhat sadder,
And the streams that murmur chilly
Touch their lips against their borders
And pass on with footstep stilly.
Can it be the streams are living,
And in saddened hearts remember
All the happiness departed
With the glory of September?

There's a rapture in the evening,
There's a beauty in the morning,
Still the wind sighs sometimes sadly,
And it bears a voice of warning.
Autumn days, O days of beauty!
Days with tinted leaf resplendent
With the glory of the woodland,
From the vine-draped branches pendant.

Evening clouds grow white and fleecy,
Morning skies a deeper azure,
As from field and wood is gathered
All the earth's abundant treasure;
And the oak trees bow their branches,
And the sturdy pine-trees splinter,
As the woodman's axe, resounding,
Fills the storehouse of the Winter.

Down the days of past Octobers,
With a music sweet and golden,
Comes the happy voice of children,
With their memories quaint and olden;
We can see them by the walnut,
As they pass the oaks and larches,
And their voices call us ever
Through the grand old forest arches.

Is it wonder, in the Autumn,
That our hearts are somewhat sober;
That we turn us to our childhood,
In the bright days of October;
That we think how sere and faded
Are the hopes that then we cherished,
How they fell beside the pathway,
How they faded, drooped, and perished?

Autumn days, now gone forever,
We have older grown, and sadder,
Since our childish feet grew weary
Climbing up life's golden ladder;
Long we oftimes for Octobers
Which have long ago departed,
Leaving us each passing season
Older grown, and sadder-hearted.

Still the air is filled with beauty,
Though the nights are cold but mellow,
And the verdure of the forest
Has turned brown and red and yellow
And the bluebird and the robin
Sing but faintly, as they hover
Round the nests of mates departed,
Which the scant leaves lightly cover.

Golden days, though touched with sorrow
For the Autumns unreturning,
Cling we to thy passing moments
With a more than human yearning;
Holding thee as something treasured,
As our human hearts remember
That thy steps are all too closely
Following by the dread December.

Still the beauty of the Autumn
Is not less, for Summer's frondage,
And the glory of its moments
Holds our hearts enthralled in bondage;
But the grading of the tints of
Of the changing of the shades,
O the birds, the buds, the blossoms!
They have perished in their cages.
They have withered in our bosoms.

So we sit, and watch thy glories
Burn a-down the forest aisles,
Turn to brown the hills and meadows,
Turn to splintered gold the larches;
Listening vainly for the music
Where our song-birds used to hover,
We but hear the partridge drumming,
And the calling of the plover.

We but hear a distant murmur
Sighing through the fading wildwood,
Faintly comes the far-off music
Of our half-forgotten childhood;
Music heard from lips now silent,
From the sainted ones departed—
Is it wonder that the Autumn
Finds us sad and older-hearted?

As the days pass slowly onward,
With their moments unreturning,
And we sit within the shadow
With a more than human yearning—
Is it wonder we remember
With a shadowy sadness heart, and sober,
That the days of life's December
Follow closely to October?

IN THE SPIDER'S WEB.

A THRILLING ROMANCE OF LOVE, DECEIT AND CRIME

CHAPTER I.

One says we are villains all.
Do they prate of the blessings of peace? We have made them a curse.
Pickpocketed, each hand lusting for all that is not its own;
And lust of gain in the spirit of Cain, is it better or worse
Than the heart of the citizen hissing in war on his own hearthstone?—TENNYSON.

"Oh, come into my parlor," said the Spider to the fly;
"'Tis the prettiest little parlor that ever you did spy."
OLD SONG.

It is sunset; a dusky red is spreading out from the horizon, and throwing a darker reflection upon the sullen sea and its more sullen shore. A weird, awful shore it is, encumbered with huge rocks and strangely hewn stone.

A grim, shuddering waste, made grimmer and more terrible by strange, stray specks of humanity, that, seen in the fading sunlight, seemed rather distorted creations of fancy than actual human beings. From stone to stone they pace, stepping with a peculiar halting, laborious gait, and looking sullenly earthward, as if their eyes were chained to the hateful, barren shore, and the looking-upward were death.

Look closer, and gain fresh cause for wonderment. There is a strange likeness in these dim figures. They move alike, their gaze is directed sullenly downward alike, they are dressed alike. A sad, dingy, gray garment, half shirt, half tunic, relieved in all cases by a patch of crimson across the arm, upon which is stamped, in letters of black relief, a number. Their feet are shod with thick, heavy, iron-soled boots, a coarse, hideous cap is upon their heads, and the hair beneath is cut almost to the skin.

The faces—ah, no! who could describe those faces? Who can speak of those crime-stamped brows, those passion-distorted lips, and those despairing eyes?

Listen! There is no sound but the sudden crash—crash of the falling stone that the coarse-grained hands are pushing, and the bent, gray-clad shoulders are heaving from the quarries. One other sound still, heard only at intervals when the stone is rolling, and that is the tramp, tramp, of the sentries, who, like the figures of Death and Eternity in the old Roman temple, forever, day and night, march to and tro on the battlements—forever, night and day, keeping watch and ward on the terrible gray-clad figures that despairingly toil upon the barren plain below.

It is the convict station in Portland, and the figures are the shadows of some of England's vilest criminals.

The sun sinks lower: the warders, stationed at measured intervals between the various gangs, yawn with weary impatience, and long for the sound of the prison-bell. When that rings, which it will do within half an hour, the gangs will have finished their work for the day, and the march for the gloomy prison on the highlands will commence.

The warders yawn impatiently, but the silent, gray-clad figures feel no impatience. They have nothing to long for, nothing to hope for. One and all, toiling on this particular plain, toil on till death, and that has been longed for so long that it seems so far off as to be hopeless. Death comes to men free and happy, but them it seems to avoid; it leaves them to their most awful punishment of life.

The quarter has chimed; the warders have grown more impatient, perhaps less vigilant, or does this tall, thin figure, with No. 108 stamped upon his arm, only fancy so? for he has broken the rule which says that no man shall separate himself from his particular gang, and is crouching behind a boulder. Is he resting? His hazel, hunted eyes flash from the nearest warder to the sentinels upon the battlements. His hand grasps the chain at his leg, to deaden its rattle as he glides along. His eyes drop from the sentinel, and travel swiftly but treacherously to the rank of the next gang. They rest upon one gray-clad figure, numbered 99. His breath comes faster, he crouches until his breast touches the ground, and, though his lips are too tightly pressed for speech, his face seems to speak in the intensity of their gaze.

Perhaps No. 99 feels their gaze, for, as he stoops with the gang, to heave the hard, cruel stone, he lifts his small, villainous eyes, and sees the dark, piercing ones fixed so earnestly upon him. A start, imperceptible, thrills through him, and as he raises his shoulder he contrives to fit one hand as a signal that he has seen and understands.

No. 108 seems satisfied; he drops his lying with a sigh, and waits with sullen patience. The stone is upheaved. The gang moves round and pauses to gain breath. A few of the miserable figures drop upon the stones.

No. 99 flings himself suddenly upon the stone behind which crouches No. 108, and so effectually conceals the piercing eyes from the warders' cat-like vigilance.

"Jem," says a low, hoarse voice, from below the stone. "Can you hear me? Don't turn your head, and speak low."

"I hear," replies No. 99 with a hoarse voice.

"Jem, there's a chance; don't start or I'll kill you. There's a chance, but it wants working. I've been wanting to speak to you for six weeks. Warder No. 24 drinks like a fish. He'll be drunk to-night—to-night at seven. I've seen the stuff in the corridor. Our cells are opposite. He carries the keys in his breast-pocket. At half-past seven to-night, Jem, he or I will be a dead man. You know me and my stroke. If I can get a clear blow with the iron jug, and without noise, we are free. Once in the corridor with his keys, we can gain this cursed cliff. Don't speak—he's looking this way! The tide comes in at ten; we must swim for it—go this minute, or we are lost."

A warder leaps along the stones; No. 99 rises as if rested; No. 108 crawls like a serpent back to his proper gang.

Crash, crash, the last stone is lifted for to-night; the bell chimes the hour, the gangs form, with listless, weary sullenness, into lines; stalwart warders, well armed, order them sternly to march. Another dreary, hopeless day of toil is done. The sun has sunk, the red glow has left the sky, darkness has fallen upon the surging sea and barren shore. The tramp of the sentinels can just be heard above the rattle on the falling beach. It is too dark to see them, but two figures are crawling under the bestling cliffs; they crawl hand-in-hand, fearful of losing each other for a moment. Not a word is spoken, their movements make no sound. Five, ten, twenty minutes pass, and then they stop and draw long, husky gasps of relief.

"Jem," says one, "where are we?"

No. 99 shakes his head and peers into the darkness. "Under the cliff," returns the other. "Right under the guard-house, I think; if so, far enough."

"Quite far enough, captain," is the hoarse reply. "And, now we are here, what's the next move?"

The other remains silent for a moment while he fumbles at his leg, then touches his breast and face.

"What's the matter, guv'nor—are you hurt?"

"A little," is the reply. "I'm bleeding like an ox."

No. 99 emits a grim, guttural laugh.

"There's enough of that with both of us," he says. "It's like our luck as the beast should turn. I thought you'd struck him straight, too, guv'nor."

"So I did," is the curt retort. "No matter; we are here, and that's luck enough."

"But we can't stop here."

"We must till the tide's up, and it's coming now; half an hour and the fishing yawls will be in front of us."

His companion shudders.

"The fishing yawls!" he repeats. "D'ye mean we're to swim for them, guv'nor, through this, in the pitch dark? Why, it's death!"

"Or freedom. Death! Jem, my man, you're worse than an idiot. What's the name you'll give to what we've left behind us? If that's life, we take death, Jem, and be thankful for it."

As he speaks, with a bitterness beyond description, he stoops and fumbles at his leg again. The sharp ears of his companion catch the grating of steel on iron.

"What's that, guv'nor?"

"A file," is the reply.

"Where did you get it from?" asks the other with undisguised astonishment.

"I made it, Jem," replies his companion quietly.

"What with?"

"An old piece of iron and my brains. It's a good one; try it for yourself."

As he speaks, he shakes the horrible link of iron from his foot, and passes the instrument to the other. No, 99 takes it with a muttered oath.

"You're a wonderful man, captain, a wonderful man. There isn't anything as you can't do—or won't do if we gets clear of this frightful torment. I'll be sworn the game's all planned out a'ready."

"It is," replies the other with quiet coolness.

The grading of the file stops for a moment.

"I thought so! S'help me, if I didn't! Might a humble pal as has always stood by you, captain, ask what the move is? It u'd pass the time away and keep the shivers off. There's a curse in the very sir o' this place that cramps a man's heart and almost chokes him. Tell us the plot, captain. I'm yourn, and you know it."

The captain looks into the darkness before him in silence for a moment, then, speaking in the whisper above which their voices had never for a moment been raised, he says:

"I'll tell you, Jem, as we swim together, as you say. We must, taking all things into consideration, and so—Jem, give me your hand."

The man he called Jem feels about in the darkness until his hard-grimed hand is clasped in the softer one of his companion, and waits silently.

"I'm going to take your oath," says the captain coolly, "to swear that you'll follow me faithfully—as to give you your due, you always have done—right to the end of what is to come. Swear it, Jem, and I'll open up the game. You'll keep your oath, I know, because I'll swear at the same time that this hand of mine shall wring your neck if you break it. Is it to be fear?"

"I swear, captain!" replies Jem hoarsely. "I've never played you false yet, captain. Would it pay me to do it now, after this little bout? Would it pay me, I asks yer?"

"No; now nor ever. Come closer; these cursed cliffs seem to me to have ears. Keep a look out all round. I'm watching for the lights of the fishing yawls."

"All right, captain," replies the other eagerly. "Go on, if it's only for talking's sake," and he shivers under the strain of long-sustained fear and excitement.

"You're right, Jem, I have a game on the board already. It wouldn't be me if I hadn't. It's a good game, too, and worth playing. Better than the last, which landed us here—not so risky, either. Did I ever tell you where I came from? No? Well, it isn't likely, when I come to think of it. I am not one of the communicative sort. What do you say to India—to Madras? I am a captain, Jem, by something more than courtesy. Captain Murpoint's a good enough name and title, and they're my real ones. They'll do again, too."

"Jem, my friend, don't believe the good people of this world when they talk of a special providence for each of us. Jack Mildmay was drowned on his homeward voyage, and Captain Howard Murpoint was left to live and rot in a convict station.

"Yes, the ship went down, and soon after Captain Howard Murpoint went down likewise. I got tired of the army; that is the mild way of putting it, though if the truth must be spoken the army got tired of me—or rather my wonderful luck at cards. You know my little trick with the ace? Enough. It suited me to cut the military life. How was I to do it? A fool would have deserted and got shot. I not being a fool, managed differently. There was a slight skirmish on the frontier one moonlight night. My men were cut to pieces like packthread. I, by a miracle, escaped. Walking over the corpse-strewn field, one of those happy thoughts which are the inspiration of knaves struck me. My corporal, a good fellow, had fallen at his post. I knew it was my corporal by his accoutrements; his face and features had been obliterated by a cannon-ball. Supposing, was my thought, that Captain Howard Murpoint's regimentals were upon that poor fellow, then everyone would say that Captain Murpoint had fallen with glory and honor, and the missing corporal had either been carried away by the Sepoys or deserted.

"Jem, my friend, I lost not a moment; but there and then exchanged clothes with the corpse, threw a cloak over my new corporal's regimentals, and started for the coast.

"I reached Paris—unfortunately for the Parisians. When Paris grew too hot, I gracefully fluttered to my native land. My native land, for eighteen months, proved as rich a harvest as a man of talent could wish.

"During those eighteen months I cleared—no matter—it is all gone, swallowed up in that fiasco. Idiot that I was to descend to the level of such poor vermin as you. What could I expect? Were these hands made for burglary? Were these brains? Bah! this is wasting time. Some sweet friends of yours reached me by chance one day, and came to grief; dragging you in for revenge's sake. Plain truth, you see, Jem. I scorn to tell a falsehood—when there is nothing to be got by it. Transportation for life! It was a hard sentence, and I wished when I heard it, and a hundred times since, that they had not balked Jack Ketch. I wished it every day till a week ago.

"What changed me? A mere bagatelle. A newspaper. A year-old newspaper, which that lout of a warder dropped from his pocket. I snatched it up and hid it in my bosom. It would brighten many a hateful hour in that horrible cell. I opened it next morning, and the first words my eyes rested on were:

"'GRAND FETE AT MILDMAY PARK, PENRUDDIE.—On the occasion of Miss Mildmay's sixteenth birthday a large party of personal friends and the tenants of the Mildmay estate were graciously invited to Mildmay Park. Some most extensive preparations have been for some time in progress to insure success for the various festivities. In the morning the numerous gayly-dressed visitors are conducted by a band to the enjoyment of archery, boating, and the subtleties of croquet. In the evening the grand hall—which was decorated by Gordon Jones—was thrown open for a ball, to which invitations to the number of two hundred had been issued. It is needless to say that the whole affair was brilliantly successful, and that the twelfth of July will be a white stone in the lives of Miss Mildmay's many friends and tenants who were enabled to partake of her hospitality. Miss Mildmay is at present staying, in company with her aunt, Mrs. W. Mildmay, at her residence, Mildmay Park'.

"That is something like it, Jem—all glitter and sparkle, diamonds and rubies. I swear, much as I had reveled in that greasy paper a moment before, I could not read another line of it. Every time I tried, my eyes looked back to Mildmay Park and the wealthy Miss Mildmay.

"This Violet was to have been my ward, and Jack's money, his enormous estates—aye, the very diamonds she wore—were to have been under my charge. What an opportunity I had lost! With such a chance, what might I not have accomplished? I minch have feathered my nest—and with ever-increasing interest—with every penny of Jack's gold; for what was a puny little bit of a girl to count for?—if I had been free. Free! that was the word, and it haunted me. One day it rang in my ears, making a chorus to the grand doings at Mildmay Park, and at last I swore that I'd give Jack's plan the slip and be a man once more. Once away from here—once in England—the way to Jack Mildmay's gold is as plain as the road to Rome. I am once more Captain Murpoint. I turn up, looking the gentleman that I am, at the park in the character of her father's friend. She knows all about me, remembers me almost as well as she does her father. Keeps all his letters—those letters in which he tells her that he is hunting, fighting, playing, or dining with his dear Murpoint—on her bosom, perhaps. Here is dear Murpoint, and she welcomes me to Mildmay Park with open arms and a shower of tears."

There was a moment's pause; Jem crept closer to the daring schemer.

"And me, captain? You won't forget me."

"No; you go with me as my servant. No thanks. I shouldn't take you if I didn't want you, my friend. I never did a generous action in my life; I leave that for fiddlers. I want you for a hundred things. I want a man who is completely under my thumb—in my power. You are in both those situations, so I help you to escape and take you with me. If you have any gratitude, keep it bottled up—don't let it evaporate in words. Well?"

The man mutters something faintly.

"But, captain, is that all the game? Don't we hold no more cards than that? It seems a chance, a regular chance."

"And what else is life?" says the captain with a short laugh of contempt. "But those are not all the cards. Even to you, my boon companion, I do not choose to show my whole hand. Enough that I hold sufficient cards to play the game, and that I have sufficient brains to win it. You, my poor Jem, have neither cards nor brains? Stop! what's that?" and his low, subtle voice sinks to a sharp hiss.

"That's the light of the fishing smack," hoarsely returns his companion.

"Not that, idiot!" is the retort in a sharper voice. "That up above. A thousand fiends! It is the moon!"

A smothered cry breaks from the parched lips of the convict Jem. He springs to his feet, then falls to the ground with a quiver of excitement.

"Captain, we are lost! In two minutes it will be like day! The soldiers can see every speck on the water for a mile round!"

"Silence!" cries the captain, crouching so motionless that his gray-clad figure looks part and parcel of the rock against which it presses. "The tide is in. That is the smack before us. Swim like the fiend! If we reach it we are safe. I have enough Swiss for liberty and life—now!"

And with the word he rises to his feet, leaps over the patch of beach that intervenes between cliff and sea, and plunges into the foremost wave. His companion follows, and not a moment too soon.

The moon that had been battling with the dark mass of clouds rises conqueror at last, and swims majestically into the clear heavens, lighting up the sea till it glows like a plain of diamonds. Not a moment too soon, for the monotonous tramp, tramp, of the nearest sentinel upon the ramparts above is suddenly broken, and his sharp voice gives the challenge:

"Who goes there?"

For answer the moon shoots a bright beam of light full upon the dark figures swimming towards the smack. With a shout of alarm the sentinel brings his musket to his shoulder.

"Dive!" hisses the white lips of the captain.

"Crack! ping!" and a bullet cleaves the air.

Another moment, and the rampart is alive.

Lights flash to and fro, showing up for a moment the excited faces of the soldiers. Shouts of warning and anger break through the silence and affright the sea gulls. Then an officer's voice rises above the din.

"There they are, close by the smack! Ready!—present!—fire!"

Crack! crack! crack!

"Ah! that's got them! There they go!—eh, what? couldn't see them?" says the commandant angrily, repeating the hesitating suggestion of a subordinate that the moon was obscured, and that he couldn't see the men as he fired. "Nonsense! You winged them right enough. Anyway, we must say we did. There have been too many escapes lately to allow of any more. We shall have the authorities down upon us for negligence. It's a singular thing that I can't run down to the town to get a rubber at whist, but that somebody must go to sleep. It isn't often I take a little pleasure; but sure as I leave my post for an hour or two, some foolhardy or sleepy-headed warder lets one of those vermin get away. There's Warder No. 24 got his back broken, and the Lord Harry knows what. Serve him right! It must be hushed up, mind! There have been too many escapes lately by far. If there's any inquiring, mind you winged them twice, and they are dead as nails at the bottom of the sea."

The sentinels gave the salute, and the officer starts off to finish the interrupted rubber.

Next morning the official whose business it was to draw up such statements reported that Convicts Nos. 108 and 99 had attempted to escape, but were shot down by the sentinel while swimming towards a fishing smack.

CHAPTER II.

O beautiful creatures! What am I
That I dare to look her way?
Think I may hold dominion sweet,
Lord of the pulse that is lord of her heart,
And dream of her beauty with easier head,
From the delicate Arab arch of her feet
To the space that, bright and light as the crest
Of a peacock, sits on her shining head
And she knows it not: oh, if she knew it
To know her beauty would half undo it. TENNYSON.

In the drawing-room at Mildmay Park was seated, in her own particular easy-chair, Mrs. Henry Mildmay.

Mrs. Henry Mildmay was a lady of that good old sort whom our modern demoiselles are rather tired of receiving as models for imitation. Herself ladylike and distinguished in feature, dress and manner, slight of figure, delicate of hand and more delicate of nerves, she was intimately imbued with a love of good birth, elegant manners, and a large income, all of which she possessed in a fair and comfortable degree.

Mrs. Mildmay was John Mildmay's only sister, and at his death she had undertaken the sole charge of his daughter Violet, whom she loved as a daughter, and by whom she was beloved in return as a mother, with just this difference that whereas the dear old lady was rather afraid of her beautiful, high-spirited ward, the girl was as fearless as a lioness, and gave her love unalloyed and unshadowed.

Violet Mildmay had inherited the brave, simple nature of her merchant prince, and was a realization of that most glorious ideal—a pure-minded, tender-hearted English girl.

Mrs. Mildmay was knitting—a favorite amusement, or occupation, as she would have dignified it, for the results of her pastime were distributed amongst the Penruddie poor—and sinking into a comfortable doze, from which the sharp striking of an ormolu clock aroused her.

"Dear me!" she murmured, placidly smiling; "dear me, Violet, I was nearly asleep."

The remark finding no answer, the old lady turned in her chair and found the handsomely-furnished room was empty.

"Violet, where are you, my dear? What a restless girl it is! She was here five minutes ago, and now she has gone. Just like poor John—never still ten minutes together."

At that moment the conservatory door was thrown open with a suddenness that made the old lady drop her needle, and a sweet but full voice immediately behind her said:

"Whom am I like aunt?"

"No one in particular, my dear," faltered the old lady, with a pleasant smile and a. "Thank you" for her needle, which the owner of the voice had sprung forward to recover before the old lady could stoop.

"Where have you been, my dear? I did not know you had left the room."

"No? Only on the lawn. It was so hot in here, and you were falling so comfortably asleep, that I thought I'd go away and be back before it was time for I know I frighten you if I move when you are fast asleep, auntie mine. Am I not careful now? Am I not improving?"

"You are everything that is good and dear, Violet," said the old lady, stroking the girl's head as it leaned over the back of her chair with its white hand. "But don't sit on the floor, my love—you will crease that pretty muslin."

"Shall I?" said the sweet voice absently and Violet sprang to her feet.

Her aunt, with another little start—she started on the average seven times in every ten minutes when her niece was near—looked up with mild nervousness at the tall, graceful figure, her gaze gradually changing to one of affectionate admiration. And who could withhold admiration?

There was beauty in the cleanly-cut oval, face, with its clear brunette skin and deep brown eyes; there was beauty in every ten minutes when her niece was near—looked up with mild nervousness at the tall, graceful figure, her gaze gradually changing to one of affectionate admiration. And who could withhold admiration?

There was beauty in the cleanly-cut oval, face, with its clear brunette skin and deep brown eyes; there was beauty in every line of the undulating figure; there was a namel-ss, indescribable charm about the girl, her figure, voice and gesture, which enthralled young and old of both sexes, and demanded admiration rather than won it.

"My poor dress," she said with a laughing pout. "How can I be a dress a he or a she, auntie?—I'll say 'it,' was so clean and stately only this morning, and now! Look, that is water. The fish leapt out of the fountain, and Tray has pawed me with his wet feet. It's no use my trying to be good, you see, dear—circumstances are too strong for me," and with a musical, rippling laugh, the light-hearted girl ran to the open piano.

The old lady sighed, but with a smile.

"I am almost beginning to think they are, Violet," she said in her low-pitched voice, so great a contrast to the full, melodious one of the girl.

"No; you will never make me anything better than an untutored savage, auntie. You've tried so hard, so very hard, to teach me how to enter a room, steal from chair to chair, lower my voice, and smile properly, but it is of no use. I can't be a model young lady, and I am always making you jump."

"Not jump, my dear."

"Well, start, then. It is all the same, auntie. Fancy you jumping! Now, I can jump. I jumped over the brook. No, not quite," and here the laugh rang out again, "but almost quite. Poor Marie, she has hard times with me. Do you know, I shouldn't like to be lady's-maid to Miss Violet Mildmay; no, not for all the mines of Peru—or is it Patagonia?"

Without waiting for an answer, she struck a chord and dashed into a waltz. That came to an end, however, as suddenly as it commenced, and the graceful figure was on its feet.

"It is too hot to play, is it not? How can you knit such weather as this? It makes me boil—yes, actually boil, to watch you!"

"Don't watch me, then, my dear," suggested the old lady mildly. "Go and sit in the arbor. It will be cool there in the shade."

"Well, I will. But I warn you, auntie, I shan't sit long. I never can sit still long. I'll try the arbor, though," and catching up her rustic hat, which for the nonce had fallen from her lovely young head to the floor, the restless girl swept in a wave of muslin and tulle from the room.

Mrs. Mildmay rose, folded her knitting into a neat little ball, stored it away in a neat little basket, and was about to quit the room, but before she could open the door Violet had ran through a conservatory again.

"Well, my dear?" said the old lady patiently.

"You left me in the arbor, you naughty," said the girl with gleaming and decisive shake of her head. "The lawn is absolutely simmering. I shall go on the cliffs."

"My dear, you will be roasted! Come and sit in the shade here, in my chair."

"Oh! then I should be suffocated. No; I'll try the cliffs. What is the time? Just time for a quiet stroll. Good-bye."

"Stop, my dear Violet. Pray, don't go without your sunshade! You will be burnt up!"

"Right. I'd forgotten that stupid old thing. Where is it? Let me see, where did I throw it?"

And she stood in the middle of the room, swinging her hat to and fro and fanning herself.

"Is that it under the piano?" said Mrs. Mildmay, pointing to the sunshade, where it lay ignominiously entangled with the legs of the instrument.

"Yes, that is it. What dear, sharp eyes you have, auntie. Come along, sunshade! It's rather hard that you, being so much the weaker, should be burnt to save me."

And, with another happy nod and smile, away she floated again, her long, diaphanous skirt whisking a current of cool air through the room and just escaping the overturning of a table of bric-brac by an inch.

The cliffs to which Miss Mildmay bent her steps were within five minutes' walk of the lawn, and were one of the young lady's favorite promenades. From them, looking seawards, she could feast her eyes upon the ocean, ever restless and sportful, like herself; turning landwards, there flitted far a fair stretch of the beautiful country which Mildmay House in the foreground, and the sparkling Tivor, where it ran in a semi-circle towards the sea, as a belt to inclose the whole.

On a part of this there stood another house, larger even and more pretentious than Mildmay's. This was the Cedars, a modern residence of yellow brick and stucco, erected at enormous cost by a certain Jabez Dodson, who had amassed a large fortune by the melting and manufacturing of tallow.

The Cedars and its inhabitants were the objects of Mrs. Mildmay's supreme detestation. Loving good birth and high breeding as she did, it was only natural that tallow should be detestable to her, and that the large and altogether hideous house which the retired tradesman had erected should be a perpetual eyesore to her.

Often, as the sunset lit up the yellow edifice, bringing out all its ugly points with unmerciful distinctness, the lady had spoken of it in very harsh terms, and with a sigh that shook the bugles in her cap she had regretted that Providence had not been kind or considerate enough to allure Mr. Dodson's fancy to a more distant spot.

"That house spoils the view and gives me the horrors, my dear," she would often say, but never meeting with any further sympathy from Violet than expressed by a laugh.

"It is ugly, I'll admit," she would remark; "but you need not look at it so often."

"I can't help it, my dear," the old lady would aver; "I am fascinated by it, am so glad that the dreadful man did not build his monstrosity during your poor father's lifetime. It would have been a cruel blow to him. I can't think why he didn't secure all the land around. Then you would have been safe from such a visitation. Fancy a tallow-chandler or melter, or whatever he calls himself, setting up a habitation within a stone's throw of your drawing-room window."

Violet would laugh again, with pleasant enjoyment of her aunt's pet aversion.

"It doesn't very much matter, that I can see, aunt, after all," she had once urged. "Of course it would be better without the Cedars; but, to give Mr. Dodson his due, the family have never annoyed us. I have never seen them, even. I scarcely know how many there are of them; do you?

Mrs. Mildmay shook her head in the negative, but a nod in the affirmative showed she was doubtful.

"I think there are only the father, mother, and one son. But I have never seen them—at least, I think not."

"Nor I," said Violet, "so, you see, they are not such dreadful characters, after all. Poor people I dare say they are as constantly deploring the nearness of the park, and declaring that we spoil their view, which we certainly do."

"How absurd!" said Mrs. Mildmay. "Violet I really believe you do not dislike them half so much as one would expect."

"Wicked as I am, I can't hate people I have never seen," Violet here laughingly replied.

And in like manner she always turned her aunt's disparagement of the Cedars aside, and contrived to say a word for the obnoxious individuals whom she had never seen. This morning, as she stood on the edge of the cliff, looking first out to sea and then at the sweet landscape, a smile rested for a moment upon her face, and her lips murmured:

"How absurd!" said Mrs. Mildmay. "Violet I really believe you do not dislike them half so much as one would expect."

"Wicked as I am, I can't hate people I have never seen," Violet here laughingly replied.

And in like manner she always turned her aunt's disparagement of the Cedars aside, and contrived to say a word for the obnoxious individuals whom she had never seen. This morning, as she stood on the edge of the cliff, looking first out to sea and then at the sweet landscape, a smile rested for a moment upon her face, and her lips murmured:

"How wonderful that one can be so happy!"

Still she had not quite recovered from the shock which the sudden sense of her peril had produced, uttered a slight cry of warning and rebuke.

"Oh, please do not look over! It is of no consequence—not the slightest in the world."

The gentleman looked back at her alarmed face, then up at the blazing sun, and smiled significantly.

"It is of great consequence," he said, and, before Violet could say another word to prevent him, he had gained the edge and was upon his knees, looking over.

"I can see it," he said, "and I think I can get it. The danger is not so great, after all. There are one or two ledges here which will bear a man's weight, I should think, and below them is your sunshade."

While he was speaking he was cautiously but fearlessly lowering himself on to one of the ledges of which he had spoken, and Violet's horrified eyes lost first his legs, then his body, and last of all his good-looking face, as it disappeared below the edge.

Rooted to the spot with terror which she in vain struggled to suppress, Violet grew white as death and almost as cold. At last her terror found utterance in a deep-drawn moan.

"Oh! come back! Please come back! I am sure you will be killed! It is horrible! Do come back!"

While she was still entreating and commanding, the handsome, careless face arose above the surface again, and with slow, cautious movements the stranger, with the recovered sunshade in his hand, was beside her. Violet drew a long breath of relief, and then, with a smile that was better than all the thanks in the world, said:

"I won't thank you, for I think you were more foolish than even I. You said it was dangerous to look over, and you actually went over! And all for this stupid, worthless thing!" And she shook the sunshade with annoyance.

"Not altogether for the sunshade," said the gentleman, smiling again. "But I am glad I have got it for you, and I assure you the danger was less than I at first imagined it; indeed, for me there was no danger. I am blessed with a steady nerve, and have had some experience in mountaineering."

Violet looked down, and then up at his calm face.

"It was very good and kind of you," she said, "and I will thank you, after all, I think." Then she made a movement, which he took in intimation that he might say good-day, and, accordingly, he raised his hat—or rather would have done so, had not the wind saved him the trouble.

"How provoking!" said Violet, looking after the hat as it sailed over the cliff, in imitation of the sunshade. "I am afraid there is a fatality about this spot. I do hope you will not go down after it too!"

"No, indeed!" he said, with a light, pleasant laugh; "my hat is really of no consequence—"

"Oh! but of more than my parasol! You have nothing to protect your head, and the sun is quite as hot as it was five minutes ago." And she smiled naively.

"True," he said. "But my head is used to scorching—in fact, rather likes it."

"You must take my sunshade," said Violet with provoking gravity.

"No, thank you," he said, imitating the gravity and suppressing the smile. "I do not dread the sunshade, and I have but a few steps to go," nodding to the blazing Cedars.

Violet was guilty of an unmistakable start.

"The Cedars!" she exclaimed, extending her beautiful eyes to their widest; "but you are not—" and she paused, as if absolutely too astonished to conclude the sentence.

"My name is Leicester Dodson," said the gentleman, a slight but not imperceptible reserve showing upon his face and in the tone of his voice as he spoke.

"Mr. Dodson's son!" said Violet slowly, as if the intelligence were too astonishing to be taken in instanter.

The gentleman bowed.

"Mr. Dodson's and Mrs. Dodson's son," he said with a smile.

For a moment Violet stood still, then her face lit up with its delicious smile, and, with a frank gesture, she held out her hand.

"Then we are neighbors," she said, as Mr. Leicester Dodson, with as much surprise as his courtesy would allow his face to express, took the well-shaped little hand. "I am Miss Mildmay."

Mr. Leicester dropped her hand as if it had grown red-hot and had burnt him. Violet colored then, but undaunted by his gesture of repudiation, continued:

"He knows how aunt dislikes his people, and is sorry he rescued my sunshade," she thought

"I am happy to have been of some slight service to you, Miss Mildmay," he said coldly, with a careless but distant bow; then he turned and walked slowly down the steep path.

Violet, looking down after him until his bare head had dropped slowly out of sight, then said audibly:

"Well, that is pride, now; but it is proper pride, I think," smiled rather sadly, and returned homewards.

"Aunt," she said, coming into the drawing-room just before dinner was served, and more quietly than was her wont, "I've had an adventure on the cliffs, startling and melodramatic. My sunshade blew over, and a gentleman was polite enough to go after it."

"My dear!" exclaimed the old lady, thinking it one of her darling's jokes.

"It's true, aunt. A stranger risked his neck—precious, no doubt, to himself and family—for a fifteen-and-sixpenny sunshade. Imprudent but heroic, was it not?"

"Very good and kind, but imprudent, as you say, my dear. Young men are so rash!"

"This one was not," said Violet, picking at the costly fringe on her dress; "he was as calm and cool as—a cucumber."

"A stranger," said Mrs. Mildmay, smiling. "Whom can it be, I wonder? Somebody staying at the Wenningfords, no doubt."

"Aunt!" said Violet, then suddenly changing the subject, "do not the vicar and his wife dine with us on Saturday?"

"Yes, my dear, and I have asked Mr. and Mrs. Giles. The vicar is a dear, good man, but—"

"Rather a bore," put in Violet decidedly.

Mrs. Mildmay looked shocked, but Violet, without waiting for a reprimand, went on with slow and most unusual gravity:

"Do you know, aunt, I should like to ask this handsome gentleman of mine?"

"My perfect stranger, my dear!" said Mrs. Mildmay with a smile.

"Yes, a perfect stranger, but a gentleman. Perfect strangers who are gentlemen, and heroic enough to risk their lives for one's sunshade, are people worth knowing, aunt, are they not? He is tall, rather dark, golden-brown, you know, nice eyes, a yellow moustache, and—I think that's all I remember—I was going to mention the smile, but of course he may not always wear that."

"I don't remember him, my dear," said Mrs. Mildmay. "But if you really want to know him, I'll try and find out who he is from the servants."

"And ask him to dinner?" urged Violet.

Mrs. Mildmay looked bewildered and puzzled.

"Yes, my dear, if you wish it, and he really belongs to the Wenningfords."

"I do wish it, aunt," said Violet. "But he doesn't belong to the Wenningfords. He belongs to the Cedars, and is no other than Mr. Leicester Dodson, the tallow-melter's son!"

* * * * * * *

It is Saturday evening, and Mrs. Mildmay's little dinner is in good progress. There are the vicar and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Giles from the Ferns, and, wonderful to say, the Dodsons from the Cedars. Miss Violet had, as usual, had her way with her aristocratic aunt, and the Dodsons are here.

For a whole day Mrs. Mildmay, with tears in her eyes, declared that she would not call at the Cedars; and it was not until Violet had with greater firmness vowed that she would go to the Cedars by herself, rather than not at all, that the good old lady had given in.

And when they had called, and Mrs. Dodson had accepted the invitation for herself and two menfolk, Violet had still further worried her aunt by declaring that the Dodsons, though they were tallow-melters, were not snobs, and that for her part she saw nothing to find fault with in Mrs. Dodson save, perhaps, rather a redundancy of color in her morning cap.

"Which, my dear aunt," Violet said in conclusion, "is an error in taste not confined to tallow-chandlers."

So there they are. Mr. Dodson, the father, a quiet, mild-eyed old gentleman, with a partiality for clear soup; Mrs. Dodson, a smiling, homely-looking lady, with a devouring admiration for her son; and the son, Mr. Leicester himself, with no particularly prominent virtue or vice save that of silence.

He had scarcely spoken a word during the soup and fish, and Violet had almost made up her mind that he was too proud and unforgiving, and was prepared to dislike him, when suddenly he, looking across the table, met her questioning glance, and with a smile that dispelled his gravity or ill-humor as a mist evaporates before the mid-day sun, broke out into conversation.

Then Violet understands that he is not only heroic, but amusing, that he is handsomer even than she had thought him, and that, above all, his manner, speech and bearing are those of a perfect gentleman. The entrees are passed round and partaken of. Mr. Leicester is describing the Vicar's Pass to Miss Mildm

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

J. F. F., Boston.—A and B play at six-card cribbage. A leads off with a nine, B with a queen, calling 19; A then lays a queen, pairing B and making it 29. B says 30—2 points as game; the result is now 30. Does A take 1 for the "go" before or after he plays his ace? If not 1 for "go," does he take one for playing last card in this series of 3? Or does A take no points at all at this time? Can 1 be made for last card played in every series of 3?, or must 1 for last card be obtained by playing the very last card in hand, the twelfth card? Also, if the A and B play alternately, or not; viz., A says 'Go,' B cannot play except the second be over 31? Who plays—B or A?..... After he plays his ace. So long as either party can play till 31 is made, he must do so. That is, supposing A had not an ace left and B could not play, A would then have to play that last ace; for which he would score 2 for a pair and 2 for the 31. "Upon for last card" means, that the party playing the last card in each hand scores 1 point for it; this does not refer to "the crib." When neither party can play, without making it over 31, the one making the nearest thereto scores 1. The cards played are then turned, and play resumed.

J. B. H., Pittsburg.—1. If the Braddocks refused to play when the umpire called upon them to do so, the score is 9 to 0 against them; and by that score all ordinary bets as to the result are decided. 2. Bets stand upon a game that is once begun, unless both clubs agree to abandon it, unless it is broken up by outside interference, or unless terminated by darkness or rain before five full innings have been played. The refusal of a club to play after game has once been started will not save bets, whether a half inning or a dozen innings have been played. It is for the umpire, and not for an interested club, to judge as to whether it is too dark to play or too stormy. 3. The bet made at the end of the fourth inning is subject to the forfeiture. As it might have been won in fact but for the declination of one club to proceed with the game, it is necessarily won in theory because of that declination.

CURRIE, Cincinnati.—The score of the game, for the purposes of all bets not predicated upon specified innings, is that announced or endorsed by the umpire. It is impossible to go behind the official record on a matter of fact; but, while we cannot so decide, we can recommend that this bet be drawn. 2. And we can also recommend that parties who wager that there will or will not be, say twelve runs, made on both sides, or even on one side in a certain game, should stipulate, as otherwise five innings will suffice to determine their bet, although more than nine innings or more than that number. 3. Yes.

J. C. C.—A owes B five cents. B says: 'I will pay you a game of euchre for thirty cents,' and lays down in order five cents. A puts down a quarter dollar. Spectator C bets spectator D that, no matter whether A or B wins, both men are square, claiming that A's playing thirty cents against nothing is paying for the privilege of playing the game he owned him. Spectator D bets the contrary. Left to your decision.".....D alone is level-headed. Were C to win the game, a transaction would be consummated, no matter what it had put up. Were B to win the game, nothing short of the putting-up of thirty-five cents by A would square the transaction, viz., thirty cents to complete his own stake, and five to complete B's.

M. C. H., Logansport.—"1. What counts in sancho—nine or ten spot? 2. What is the largest number of points that can be counted at Cribbage? 3. Can B take the five records in making five trays in the pack. Can A claim and hold the money?".....Yes. The rule is that all bets on a foul deck stand until the foul itself is detected.

3. This is a pretty safe wager. It will first have to be determined whether or not the gentleman committed suicide, and the evidence thus far tends to upset the theory that he did. In the next place, even admitting that he did intend committing suicide, would give no decision without having before us a copy of his policy. Then, too, the courts have rendered conflicting decisions upon this point, which we are already served.

HERMIT, Mast Hope.—1. A "monster cetacian" is simply a huge whale: and whales are likely to damage small vessels with which they come in contact. We are not aware that there was ever such a vessel called Abraham Lincoln, and it is pretty certain that Admiral Farragut did not "scour the North Pacific" in her. After the late war he visited Northern Europe, and was entertained by Prince Oscar, from that cruise he came home and died. 3. The works of the author named are charming fiction, with enough of scientific accuracy to suggest to some minds that possibly everything therein is fact.

J. B. C., Milton.—A bet B that a man cannot lawfully be made an honorary member of an amateur baseball club without being known personally, or anything about being square. Who wins?".....There is manifestly either quibbling here or a lack of thorough understanding, and the wager had better be declared off. So far as the club itself is concerned, a man can be made an honorary member without being informed beforehand of the compliment in store for him; but he cannot, without his knowledge, become a member of the National Association of Clubs, and the honor is essential to its confirmation.

J. H. M., Kingston.—The Secretary of the Lawrence Club having abandoned the base ball umpire save to the Executive Committee, leaf by a score of 9 to 0, he wins in the several instances who bet (1) that the Mapleleaf Club would win the game, (2) that the Mapleleaf would win the game by three runs and (3) that they would win by nine runs. The umpire must be sustained, on general principles. The statement submitted presents nothing that would justify an exception to this general rule.

W. G., Toronto.—1. The remains of the late John Wilkes Booth were removed from their resting-place beneath the floor of a warehouse owned by Edwin Grossvenor, Washington, D. C., on Feb. 15, 1869, and were taken by John H. Weaver, an undertaker, to Baltimore, Md. The remains were deposited on the 18th in the private vault of Mr. Weaver, in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore. 2. General McClellan was born Dec. 3, 1826. 3. Four cards must be taken from the top, and four left at bottom, to constitute a legal cut.

WM. D., Druggist.—1. If A make a bet of $20 each on two races, A wins one race, B wins one, which constitutes a draw; but A bets B $5 that he will win more of the stakes than A will. A claims that the last bet is B drew, the same as the other two, and that he is the only way in which he could win more of the stakes than B was by winning both races. That is what he meant when he bet. B relies that he won a bet at all. If the latter was his meaning, he should have said nothing. B wins the $5.

TIDAL WAVE.—"Will you kindly inform me the date of that last great tidal wave at St. Thomas, W. I.?".....Cannot give an unqualified answer, on the foregoing statement, as "the little unpleasantnesses" at St. Thomas are variously called "hurricanes," "tornadoes" and "tidal waves," and sometimes all three. Probably you refer to the opportunity that was afforded the U. S. vessels De Soto and Susquehanna to air their keels. That was on November 18, 1867.

TYRO.—"A and B are playing cribbage. A plays a 6, B follows with a 6, calls 12 and pegs 2; B plays another 6, calls 18 and pegs 2; A then plays a queen, calls "30," and asks if it is a "go," whereupon B calls a halt, says there is a mistake, and demands the privilege of counting. This is not allowable, where they mean nine or more innings, they should so stipulate, as otherwise five innings will suffice to determine their bet, although more than nine innings or more than that number.

J. C. C.—"A owes B five cents. B says: 'I will pay you a game of euchre for thirty cents,' and lays down in order five cents. A puts down a quarter dollar. THE TURF.

WEEKLY TROTTING RECORD.

Where the words "second money" accompany the name of a horse, the meaning is that horse won second money without earning a record, and that his competitor won in three straight heats. Horses that win less than second money are not mentioned unless they have also earned a record in that particular race.

† In this trot Moissey, John H. and the stallion Thomas Jefferson also figured. The last mentioned was fourth in the first heat, and distanced in the second.

LOUISVILLE JOCKEY CLUB FALL MEETING.

The first Fall meeting of the newly-organized Louisville Jockey Club commenced on Monday, Sept. 20. The weather was clear and cool, the track in fair order and favorable for fast time, and the attendance large. There were three races on the programme for each of the six days of the meeting. The opening race on the first day was a dash of a mile and a quarter, for a purse of $250, which was won by Swigert's Egypt, 4yrs., beating Marmion (second), Redman (third), Ortolan, Camargo and Weatherby, in 2:14¾. Egypt was the favorite, with Camargo second choice, and all the rest sold in the field. Weatherby came in second; but, his jockey falling off after passing the stand, the judges disqualified the horse for the place, which they gave Marmion, the third horse, although the jockey remounted, and brought his proper weight to the scale. The race for the Kentucky St. Leger—a dash of two miles, for two-year-olds, $50 each, play or pay, with $1,000 added by the club, of which $200 went to the second horse—had ten runners out of the twenty horses entered. It was won by Swigert's King Alfonso, beating Ten Broeck (second) Verdigris (third), George Graham, Add, Asterlite, Millionaire, Voltigeur, Enlister and Malmsal; time, 3:42½. In the betting Ten Broeck was the favorite at long odds, Voltigeur being second choice, King Alfonso third, George Graham next, and the rest in the field. The value of the stakes was $2,000. The third race was for the club purse of $400, for all ages, mile heats, and was won by Katie Pearce, beating Brakesman (second in the last heat), Hazen (second in the first heat), Portleonard and Phyllis. Brakesman was the favorite, Hazem second choice, and Katie Pearce third; the others sold in the field. Katie won easily in 1:44¾, 1:45½.

On the second day, Tuesday, Sept. 21, the weather was warmer and the attendance larger. The first race was the Blue Grass Stakes, a dash of three quarters of a mile, for two-year-old fillies, $25 entrance, play or pay, with $300 added, of which the second horse received $100. Seven out of the fifteen entries came to the post, and the race was won by Keene Richards' War Dance filly Clemmie G., beating Wild Oats, Bay Dick filly (second), Tecala (third), Plenty, Pirouette, Alborac and Lady Clipper, in 1:18¾. Plenty was the favorite, with Alborac second choice and Clemmie G. third. Value of the stakes, $675. A two-mile-heat race, for all ages, for a purse of $700, followed, and was won by the old mare Arizona, with the greatest ease, in two straight heats, her only opponent being Oxmore; time, 3:45, 3:54¾. A mile-and-a-half dash, for a purse of $300, was won by Williams & Owing's Fair Play, beating Vandalite (second), Kilburn (third), Katie, Steinbok, Newburn and Novelty, in 2:39. Fair Play and Katie were about equal favorites in the betting, with Steinbok selling close up with them and Novelty next choice.

On the third day, Wednesday, Sept. 22, the Reynolds Stakes (so named in compliment to Mr. Hunt Reynolds, the Kentucky thoroughbred breeder) was the first race. It was for all ages, mile heats, $25 each, play or pay, with $400 added by Mr. Reynolds, of which $100 went to the second horse. Four out of the eleven entries came to the post; Robinson, Morgan & Co.'s three-year-old colt Bob Woolley being the winner in two straight heats in 1:44, 1:44½, and beating Misdeal (second in each heat), Volcano (third), and Kilburn. Bob Woolley was the favorite at three to one over the field; Volcano being second choice before the first heat was run, and Misdeal after. The race for the Belle Meade Stakes (named after the stud-farm of General W. G. Harding, the Tennessee breeder and turfman) was next, and was confined to two-year-old colts, $25 entrance, play or pay, with $300 added by the Jockey Club, of which $100 to the second out of the twenty-three nominations came to the post, and the winner turned up in Nickols' colt Vagrant, a son of Virgil, who won the race easily by two lengths in the fast time of 1:17¾, beating Bengal (second), Bombay (third), Ashby, Johnny B., the Slipper, Bokah, Pluto, Rima Butler, Wesley, Planet colt, Mulmistic and Grit. Value of the purse, $675. The winner, Vagrant, is probably the best two-year-old that has been out this season; he was bred, like Bob Woolley, by Mr. Sanford, and sold at the yearling-sale in 1874 for $200, but, unfortunately for his owner, he has no engagements next year in the East. A dash of one mile and a quarter, for a purse of $250, for all ages, was won by Egypt, beating Grenoble (second), Verdigris (third), and Gray Steel; time, 2:12¾. Egypt was the favorite over the field, with Verdigris second choice and Grenoble third. The race was won by only half a neck.

On Thursday, Sept. 23, the fourth day of the meeting, there was a larger attendance than on any previous day. The track was safe and fast, and better time was made in consequence. The first race was for the Woodburn Stakes, appropriately named in honor of A. J. Alexander, the owner of that well-known breeding establishment for thoroughbreds, who added $500 to the stakes. It was for three-year-old fillies, at $50 each, half forfeit, with $500 added; one mile and three-quarters. It closed with eleven entries, eight of which started, making its value $975. Gypsie was the favorite at five to one over the field; but Messrs. Ewalt & Swiney's Emma C., by Planet, proved an easy winner, beating Gyptis (second), Elemi (third), Sallie Gardner, Lady Bugg, Valerian, Vinaigrette and Phyllis; time, 3:06¾. Like the two previous winners, Bob Woolley and Vagrant, Emma C. was bred by Mr. M. H. Sanford, and sold as a yearling in 1873 for $280. A mile heat race, best three in five, for a purse of $500, for all ages, was won by McIntyre & Swiney's filly Katie Pearce in three straight heats, beating Brakesman (second), Millionaire, third, Crown Prince and Joe Johnston, the latter distanced in the first heat; time, 1:46¼, 1:44¾, 1:46½. Katie Pearce was the favorite over the field at the odds of two to one, and after every heat she became a better favorite, Brakesman being second choice. The Post Stakes, for all ages, $50 entrance, play or pay, with $800 added by the Jockey Club, of which $200 to the second horse, three miles, was the third and last race of the day. Of the nine subscribers, five were represented at the post, Frank Harper winning the stake with his three-year-old colt Ten Broeck, who won by three lengths in the fast time of 5:31, and beating Stampede (second), Vandalite (third), Arizona and Enlister. Arizona was the favorite, with Stampede and Vandalite second and third choices. The brilliant running of the winner, Ten Broeck, makes the loss of his promising sire, imported Phaeton (a son of King Tom) all the more to be regretted by breeders of racing stock. At the recent Lexington meeting, Ten Broeck ran and won the mile-and-five-furlong purse race in 2:49¾, which is six and three-quarter seconds the fastest on record.

On Friday, Sept. 24, the fourth day, the weather was threatening, but, fortunately, the rain held off, and the attendance was large. The first race was for the Gentleman's Cup, value $250, for all ages, members of any regular or organized jockey club to ride; one mile and an eighth. It was won by Port Leonard, ridden by Mr. A. Trigg Moss, beating Token and Austin, in 2:01¾, with the greatest ease. Token followed the Tobacco Stakes, for three-year-olds that had not won prior to Aug. 1, 1875; $25 entrance, play or pay, with $400 added by the tobacco-dealers of Louisville, of which $100 to the second horse; mile heats. There were nineteen entries and six runners; Swigert's King Alfonso winning the stake, worth $675, in two straight heats, and beating Gyptis (second), Misdeal (third), Vagabond, Leap Year and Lady Bugg; time, 1:44½, 1:45¼. In the first heat Lady Bugg bolted, and, running into the fence, split her head open against

THE TIE-BACK.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I saw her walking down the street—
I had to cast my eye back—
She had such tiny little feet,
The girl who wore the tie-back.

I glanced at her, she glanced at me,
She sighed—I had to sigh back;
It was a pretty sight to see,
The maiden of the tie-back.

I thought, by going down the lane,
That I could quickly hie back;
And, passing round, could meet again
The girl who wore the tie-back.

I felt that through all coming time
My every thought would fly back
To meet her in a Summer clime,
My angel of the tie-back.

We met, we sought a cream-saloon,
For I had been quite spry back;
Oh, how I wished I were the spoon
That fed that lovely tie-back.

* * *

A brawny fist between my eyes
Soon laid me flat on my back;
I saw, somewhat to my surprise,
The husband of the tie-back.

As down the street my footsteps raced,
I wished I had my tin back,
And never, never had embraced
The angel of the pin-back. NIX.

THE IMPALEMENT.

A Romance of the Arena.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I learned my business at Astley's Amphitheatre long before the Japanese or kindred troupes were known to the public in America or Europe, and, though I suppose they were the first or original of "the knife-throwers," not one of the Japs was ever surer with a blade than I am.

I was attached to Dumsday & Bradley's Circus, and we put into New Orleans for the Winter. Business being good, most of the party stopped at a hotel on Madras street, where there was quite as much comfort and style as we wanted. To come right to the point, I had not been in the house above two weeks before (to their great surprise of everybody) I fell desperately in love with a wonderfully pretty girl, or woman (I scarcely know which to call her), who boarded there, and was much respected by all who knew her. It was not very common for any of us to be taken in that way, but I was completely done for. I don't believe this would have happened if she had not made the first advances. That was what we generally looked for, and generally had. She was a Southern girl in reduced circumstances, but with some property left her by her father, who had been a wealthy planter before the war. My love grew to a fierce passion, and was returned with equal fervor. Unlike most of the girls I had met in the South, she was not easily carried away with any excitement; but she was, nevertheless, full of fire, and my knife-throwing, she said, impressed her more deeply than anything she had ever seen before in a circus.

I noticed her the first night she came to the tent, and I saw that she was breathless with attention and awe, although I was only throwing trick-knives that night. I chafed my comrades a good deal at my success with the matter of feminine hearts, in my time, and soon had the laugh on me as a "spooney." Well, so I was, for I was perfectly crazy with infatuation. The ringmaster's wife, who was considerable of a flirt, tried to wean me from my affection, but it was no go, for she was no more to be compared to the queen-like and dashing girl that had conquered me than a hen is to be compared to an eagle. I had a habit of leaving my room-door open in the afternoons, and sometimes I used to be practicing or experimenting with new feats just as Eleanor happened to be passing by. She always looked in as though she couldn't help it, and I guess she couldn't, and so by degrees we formed an acquaintance. I don't think she would be called a forward girl, but she certainly attacked my heart with a great deal of vigor. Afterwards nothing would satisfy her but joining the circus and becoming a daring equestrian, she said; but I pretty nearly talked that foolishness out of her head. Evenings went on smoothly for a month, and I rather settled it in my mind that I should become a husband, although nothing positive had been said on either side.

The new attachment made me more ambitious, and I constantly sought to make my performances more startling. I felt that I must do something to actually make people's hair stand on end, set them screaming with terror. Then I thought of getting rid of my chum, the man who stood in the ring every night and allowed himself to be pinioned with the knives. He was not particularly young nor prepossessing, and to many spectators it seemed as though it didn't matter much whether a stray knife struck him or not. So I made up my mind to get something younger and more picturesque. Finally I found a boy about fifteen years old, who was the most curious mixture of womanly and manly beauty, of youth and maturity, I had ever seen. Beautiful? That was no name for it—that does not begin to describe his appearance even in repose. The first time I met him I sat down and looked at him fully twenty minutes; and when his face became fully animated with my proposition, he almost bewildered me with a strange sort of magnetism. His skin was too light and fair for a Creole's, and a shade too brown for a purely white boy's, while his hair, though finer than silk, hung in a profusion of rich, small curls about his throat and neck. What to make of him I didn't know; but I saw he was just the boy to stand up before the knives, and by his great beauty make an audience shudder for fear he might be harmed. To my astonishment I found that he had driven Eleanor completely out of my heart without making me feel in the least treacherous. I almost laughed to myself as I said: "This is killing two birds with one stone—who will call me 'spooney' now?" However, as I became more familiar with him, his strange power over me grew feebler, and (as several days elapsed before I had finished arrangements with his parents), I recovered my equilibrium and my love for Eleanor began to flow to him as naturally as though it had never been diverted from its channel. I don't believe she would have suspected it if she had not made the first advances. That was what we generally looked for, and generally had. She was a Southern girl in reduced circumstances, but with some property left her by her father, who had been a wealthy planter before the war. My love grew to a fierce passion, and was returned with equal fervor. The club in its twenty years of existence was never before so badly whipped as this season. It will be seen that the Atlantics have been the worst "Chicagoed" team known in the arena, eight times failing to score a run in a game, while in seven more they only scored a single.

CHELSEA vs. FLYAWAY.

The Chelsea Club of Brooklyn last week defeated, for the second time in succession, the two strongest of the New York City amateur nines—the Staten Island and Flyaway Club teams. Their first game with the Flyaways was won by 8 to 7, after a close contest, and their last was a very decisive victory, as the suspended score shows. A local daily, in commenting on the match, says: "Ten thousand people were present at the match at the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, yesterday afternoon, to witness the return game between the Chelseas of Brooklyn and the Flyaways of this city. This is good proof that the interest in professional playing has faded out, and that those who like to see the game played earnestly and honestly flock to see the amateurs play, as this was the largest crowd that has assembled at any game this season." This argument is not sound. While there is no questioning the fact, as before stated, that much of the interest in local professional games has been lost, from the fact of the existence of doubt in the minds of the baseball public as to the integrity of the play, there is still just the same desire to patronize match games marked by earnest efforts to win, between professional nines, as ever; but it is not fair to assume that, because some four or five thousand people gather on a free ground to see a well-advertised game between rival amateur nines, that therefore the interest in professional play has died out, simply because so many people cannot afford to pay half a dollar to see the professionals play. There have not been ten thousand people at any free ball match in this vicinity since the great silver-ball match of twelve odd years ago at Hoboken, while 15,000 people have been gathered at the Capitoline Grounds to see professional games.

On the occasion of this match of Sept. 14, at Hoboken, N. J., a close contest was expected; but it turned out to be quite one-sided, as the Chelseas had everything their own way, their opponents playing a miserable game. With the exceptions of Dwyer and Wareham, who had no difficult plays to make, the New York nine fielded wretchedly, while the Brooklyn Club did quite well. Clare's excellent catching was quite a feature, while Rule pitched so effectively that only four clean hits were made off him. Dunne and Hourigan, too, played their positions finely, the latter making the best play of the game by a magnificent throw from left field to home base, by which he put a man out who was running home. Cassidy, also, made an excellent running catch.

CHELSEA vs. STATEN ISLAND.

The Staten Island Club nine, which team has done some fine play this season, retired from any claim upon the so-called "amateur championship" of the metropolis on Sept. 22, on which occasion they were for the second time whipped by the Brooklyn Chelseas. The first game ended in favor of the Chelseas by 18 to 17, and this by 8 to 1. This gives them the series. The game was splendidly played, and very exciting up to the sixth inning, at which time neither side had scored a run, and only five errors were the totals of both nines. In the sixth inning, however, the Brooklyn boys, by some good batting, aided by two errors of their adversaries, rolled up three runs, and after that had everything their own way. Clare, Rule, West, McCabe and Hourigan all did well in their positions, Dunne batting at first base also did good service for his club, and James made a pretty catch of a high line-ball in the last inning, on which he made a double-play. Mr. Blodget's impartial and accurate umpiring was a feature of the game.

MUTUAL vs. HARTFORD.

These clubs played their second "exhibition" game since the completion of their series on Sept. 24, on the Union Grounds, Brooklyn, N. Y., and, though the weather was fine, the attendance was such as to show that exhibition games at fifty cents admission are played-out contests in this vicinity, scarcely a hundred people being present. It would be better both until the Boston, Philadelphia, Hartford and Athletic Clubs have completed their series together, and then get up a prize tourney, with an exhibition of long throwing, swift pitching at a mark, and quick base-running, for prizes. This would draw; "exhibition" games at half a dollar will not. In Friday's contest Bradbeck carried off the palm, both at the bat and in the field, a poor throw in the last inning being his only error out of twelve chances. Start and Hallinan did the best playing for their side.

CHAMPIONSHIP OF WESTERN PA.

On Saturday, Sept. 18, a most interesting game was played at Meadville, Pa., between the Mutuals of that place and the Braddocks of Braddock's Fields, near Pittsburg, being the first of a series for the championship of Western Pennsylvania. The game was peculiarly interesting, inasmuch as the two clubs are considered the strongest of all in the State west of the Alleghenies, and it was their first meeting. Although the day was dark and dreary, the attendance was large, the grandstand being crowded with ladies. The game was hotly contested throughout, but the superior playing of the Mutuals enabled them to win after a sharp two hours' struggle. Jas. Carleton of Cleveland, O., umpired the game, and as usual his decisions were marked by good judgment and impartiality. He has umpired a majority of the championship games, and has always given satisfaction.

It will be seen by the above that Newcastle, Oil City and Mercer are virtually out of the race; and, as rumors point to the disbandment of the Xanthas, the championship really lies between the Mutuals (present champions) and the Braddocks, with a slight advantage in favor of the former.

BASEBALL IN CALIFORNIA.

The fifth championship game between the Eureka and Olympic nines took place at the Recreation Grounds, San Francisco, Cal., on Friday afternoon, Sept. 10, in the presence of several hundred spectators. Game was called at one o'clock, with the Olympic at the bat; by some bad hitting they scored three runs. In the following inning two runs were scored by the Blue Stockings on glaring errors by Hicks and Carey; but in the next seven innings McAdams' pitching was so effective that they failed to count, and seven successive blanks were the result. A couple of errors by Tracy allowed the Eurekas to score two runs in the sixth inning, when they should have been blanked. Crane, McAlitee, Fish, McAdams and Ward excelled in batting. Coe bore off the palm for fielding.

BOSTON vs. T. B. F. U. S.

The Boston professionals visited Bridgeport, Ct., Sept. 23, for the second time this season, to indulge in a little ball-tossing with the T. B. F. U. S. Club of that city. The home nine played a brilliant game up to the fourth inning, Goldie's pitching troubling the champions considerably. After that the T. B.'s commenced to weaken, and several inexcusable errors allowed the "Reds" to score heavily, and, though they made twelve runs, not one of them was earned. The attendance was large.

THE FLYAWAYS ANSWER THE RESOLUTES.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE CLIPPER.—Sir: The Flyaway Club feel proud of the flattering encomium pronounced upon them by the Resolute Club of Elizabeth, N. J., and acknowledge their thanks through your paper. While we would be happy to accept of the very graceful challenge of this gentlemanly and expert club, several reasons may be assigned why it is out of our power to do so. Our absence from home for three weeks has delayed us in playing return games with many clubs who have prior claims on us. We must accept of the challenges of other amateur clubs who engage us for games, in both a private and a public manner. The season is almost closed, and we have games enough on the docket to occupy the entire time, playing, as we do, an average of two games a week. Our friends must remember that on two occasions we attended on the ball-field ready to play them, and were prevented from so doing by rain; and if now we give preference of games to amateurs, it is only because they have prior claims, and not that we would otherwise hesitate to favor those for whom as gentlemen we entertain the highest respect, and as ballplayers accord the title of par excellence. Respectfully,

JOHN G. H. MEYERS.

THE GEER AND LUFF CASE.

A note from Mr. Geer, which did not come in time for our last issue, states that he can prove his entire innocence of the charge made against him in the New Haven papers and since then it has been endorsed by the action of the court in trying the case last Thursday, he being honorably acquitted, there not being the slightest evidence against him. A letter from Mr. Luff is to the same purport, as will be seen below:

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23, 1875.

EDITOR CLIPPER.—In consideration of the unfortunate circumstances that have occurred to me in New Haven, and in justice to myself and the profession, I deem it my duty to deny in toto the charges preferred against me, and state that I had no part whatever in any of the thievish transactions. I was simply unfortunate enough to be the room-mate of the person in whose possession the goods were found. The statement that I was seen leaving any place or hotel with increased baggage is entirely false. To all enough to repair the damage, as far as possible, already done my character, by inserting the above in the next issue of your valuable paper. Very respectfully yours, HENRY T. LUFF, 232 South Sixth street.

CRICKET.

THE INTERNATIONAL TOURNAMENT.

In our last issue we gave a telegram containing a resume of the play on Monday, Sept. 20, and we now proceed to furnish the details. Thos Hargreaves and Brewster, who were not out on Saturday, with the respective scores of 17 and 13 attached to their names, took up their stand at the wickets, Howden and Singleton bowling. Brewster increased his score to 23, and was then caught by Cummings, who had given him a life in the previous over, his wicket—the sixth—falling for 197 runs. Dan Newhall assisted Tom Hargreaves to run the score up to 209, when the latter was caught by Taylor at square-leg, having played a good inning for 31 runs. Chas. Newhall and Magee added respectively 9 and 5; and, as Spencer Meade did not bat, owing to a sore hand, the inning concluded with the fall of the tenth wicket for 230 runs, Dan Newhall carrying out his bat for 15. After the usual recess for dinner, the game was resumed, Lieutenants Browne and Tennants representing the British officers, while Charles and Dan Newhall bowled on behalf of the Philadelphians. A fine catch by Tom Hargreaves at mid-wicket got rid of Browne for a couple of singles, and another pretty catch by Brewster soon settled Tennants, making two wickets down for 31 runs. Lieut. Turnour batted well for 10, but ran himself out foolishly. Lieutenants Howden and Cummings, by fine free hitting, ran the score up to 52, when the former was bowled by Charles Newhall, four wickets having then fallen. Lieut. Farmer was the only one that afterwards made any stand with Cummings, and they raised the score to 89, when the former was clean bowled by Dan Newhall, Lieut. Taylor's wicket falling the very next ball. Cummings then terminated a brilliant inning of 39, displaying a masterly defense and free hitting against fine bowling and fielding, his wicket—the ninth—falling for 97 runs. That concluded play for the day. On Tuesday, Sept. 21, at 12.05 P. M., the British officers concluded their first inning for 98 runs, Dan Newhall clean bowling the last two men for ciphers. The British officers had then 132 runs to make in order to clear their opponents' score, and, of course, had to follow their inning, it looking highly improbable that they would save themselves from a one-inning defeat. Lieutenants Turnour and Tallents went first to the wickets on behalf of the British officers in the second inning, the former being caught at point by C. Newhall, the first ball delivered. Dan Newhall bowled at the other end. Captain Wallace did not make much of a stand, his wicket falling for 13 runs. Lieut. Cummings, the best bat by far of any of the contending teams, then took up his place at the wicket, and, with Tallents, "mounted" rapidly the score, until the latter was caught cleverly at the wicket after he had made 23 runs, including a six-drive over the pavilion off C. Newhall, and two 4's, the third wicket falling for 40. Lieutenant Browne quickly contributed 6, and was then neatly caught at the wicket. Captain Taylor was the next one to help Cummings in running up the score, and, the fielding being in a number of instances rather loose, these two, by some splendid hitting, made the total assume the respectable proportions of 102 for five wickets, when Cummings was caught at deep square-leg by Robert Newhall off the bowling of his brother Charles. Cummings had again made the highest score of his side, his 43 being a masterly exhibition of scientific batting, giving but two chances—one to Tom Hargreaves at long-leg, when he had scored 24, and another to Magee at mid-wicket, when he had made 42. Dan Newhall about this time changed his delivery, tossing slows, one of which Lieutenant Farmer drove to the on for four; but he was caught the very next ball at the wicket. Lieutenant Howden was soon retired by Charles Newhall. Lieutenant Singleton next assumed the defense of the vacated wicket, and aided Captain Taylor to run the score up to the figure that closed the gap between the Americans and the British officers. When 136 runs had been placed to the British account, Captain Taylor was neatly caught at the wicket—the fourth victim in this inning to the handiwork of George Newhall. He had made 29 runs by excellent play, exhibiting a capital defense and some splendid hitting. Lieutenants Singleton and Tennant were then both clean bowled by Dan Newhall's tantalizing slows, the former's hard hitting having yielded 23 runs, in which were only three singles. Lieutenants Davies and Carpenter, the two last men, made 29 between them before the latter fell a victim to the slows, he having made 16, including three 3's, while Davies carried his bat out for 18, his best hit being a drive over the ropes and past the scorer's pavilion for five. The last wicket fell for 184, leaving the Philadelphians 53 runs to make in their second inning in order to win. As it was then half-past five o'clock in the afternoon, play was stopped for the day. On Wednesday, Sept. 22, the cricket tournament was brought to a satisfactory conclusion in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. At 3.25 P. M. the Philadelphia team commenced its second inning, George Newhall and John Large batting against the bowling of Lieutenants Howden and Singleton. The second ball of Howden's first over leveled George Newhall's leg-stump, and ruined his chance for the "highest-average" prize. Dan Newhall quickly put together 9, and was then caught and bowled by Howden. Tom Hargreaves was in for some time, and caused Browne to be substituted as bowler for Singleton, his fourth ball clean bowling Hargreaves after he had made 7. Robert Newhall then joined Large, and before they could be separated the requisite number to win had been obtained, Large being not out with 19 and R. Newhall with 8, and Philadelphia had thus won the deciding match with eight wickets to spare.

THE FOLLOWING are notified of letters awaiting them at the De rot (Mich.) Post-office: Prof. Martinez, manager; Mr. Marindale, of Cooke's Circus and Agent of the Martinho Troupe.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, Sept. 27, '75.

There have been no fresh theatrical law-suits since last week's record, for the law suits but one party to the issue, and, win or lose, all contestants are "mulct" in certain expenses, which fall with a heavy hand on the litigants, and leave the poor player "poor indeed." So our managers, after the law's fitful fever has ended, have settled down to hard work. Daly is running "Our Boys," to see which our girls attend the theatre, and show their appreciation of nice points by delicate applause. Lester Wallack, having been ruled out, has closed for repairs—no cards. Having got rid of the bactrian Campbell and his dreadful myrmidons, Brother Stuart and his side-pat her Chandos Fulton are ringing in changes on "The Mighty Dollar," which will continue on until a change is rendered necessary by fluctuating circumstances. Messrs. Shook & Palmer are preparing "Rose Michel" for an early airing, with Rose Eytinge as the crowning gem in this beautiful bouquet. The Kiralfys, having proved their title clear to "A Voyage to the Moon in Eight Days," are still at the Academy of Music, getting things in readiness for their voyage abroad.....It is with sadness that we are called upon to announce the early decease of the Grand Opera-house. We sympathize with the relatives and friends of the family, and condole with those who are left to mourn their loss:

Closed the doors gently,
Bridled each breath,
As again this grand temple
Approached its death.
Bear them out softly—
O Managers three!
May mem'ry's chaste mantle
Rest lightly on thee.
Gone to meet little Jimmy.

.....To correct a popular error, we may be pardoned for remarking that the principal vocalist of the Martinetti Mantle Opera Company is so far advanced in her music-books that she objects to being called a "prima-donna.".....We would also take occasion to remind our readers that the Buffalo Bill and Gran who were the principal actors in the deadly affray in this city on Sept 19 must not be confounded with our genial friend Gran and the prairie-fellow Buffalo William of stage renown. These latter gentlemen are harbingers of peace, while the actors in the fatal fight alluded to are otherwise.....Our Jim" is fraught with strange emotions and novel ideas. The other night he went to Booth's Theatre, and, from his dizzy height in the gallery, he calmly looked down upon the sea of bald heads that, like Sanpiabella, reared their polished spheres amid the shining lights of New York fashionable life; and the more he looked, the more the wonder grew that those waste places among the heads of the people had not long ago been utilized in the cause of our commercial prosperity. The young man is astonished that some bold tradesman has not long before this sought upon the bald heads of theatregoers to advertise his wares. Landscapes, flowers, architecture, might be laid out beautifully upon these smooth and polished surfaces, interwoven with which might be seen the words: "Get the best—the only original clam-chowder—at J. Dugan's;" "Everybody reads THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, the great American theatrical and sporting authority;" "Grand Egyptian Hotel, on the European plan—rooms one dollar per day downwards;" "Championship Baseball Match to-morrow—go early;" "Just out—Tom and Jerry, at Jerry Thomas'"—all are invited;" "Wanted, a chambermaid and two utility people—salary no object—apply at stage door of the Acropolis;" "Hot lunch of turkey and oysters, from eight to twelve next Saturday night, at Tim Cassidy's;" and many similar trade-marks might be inscribed with great benefit to the advertisers. We throw out the hint at the suggestion of James, who has already applied for a copyright.....And talking about parties who, like Uncle Edward, have no hair on the top of their heads, on the places where the hair ought to grow, reminds us of a little story, which we shall proceed to tell in our own comical way. The man's real name is J. Carstairs Norton, Esq.; but we shall call him Dick Spangles, in order that his wife and children may not suffer from the indiscretions and imprudence of their husband and father, which they would were we to make public his bona-fide name. He used to do a four-horse act in Mabie's Circus—and maybe he does yet, for all we know; as a flip-flappist he was nolens volens—nay, more, as a cloud-swingist he was sui generis, and as a banner-bearer and balloon-holster he was equaled by few and excelled by none. Well, this Spangles party thought the world of us, and he never let us forget the generosity of his soul when he lent us a half dollar to bet on a sweet dream we had one night. [No, Jimmy; it didn't draw a cent, and we shrewdly surmise that Spangles thinks we never paid him that half a dollar; but be that as may—or, rather, sous verrons.] Well, one hot Summer's day, when the thermometer stood at an inclination of forty-five degrees, we, in company with the flip-flappist, went up the river to Fort Lee, as it might be, to have a quiet day's sport. Spangles was a real funny chap, though he did wear a bald head, and enjoyed a joke like anything; so, the day being hot and sultry, Dick thought he would "go it alone," to speak by the card, and have a comfortable swim, which it was a selfish thing on the part of Mr. Spangles, as we told him. About an hour afterwards, as we sat by a purling stream, endeavoring to entice a minny-gudgeon to its ruin [No, we didn't catch it, James; but it took our bait, we regret to say], a party of girls came running thitherward, all in a fright, and calling upon us to save them! Their faces were blanched with fear [Now, James, it was not face-powder, and you should know better than to hint at such a thing], and their eyes protruded from their sockets, if we are not mistaken. These young girls, you will understand, had been bathing in the gentle waters of the Tappan Zee, when all of a sudden, without warning, a man-ster came down upon them like the waters of the Red Sea upon the hosts of Pharaoh! That's what they told us, and they insisted that we should go in pursuit of the hideous fiend without delay. We knew how it was; we knew who the monster was; but nevertheless we boldly seconded after "it," which it was Spangles, and he was splashing and a-shouting like he had just emerged from a rich uncle's funeral. It seems that, while this here Spangles—with nothing on him to hide his unseemly nudeness—was slashing around in the water, and turning flip-flops and cart-wheels and things of a like aquatic nature, and just as he was a-going to see how high he could stand on his head in the water, he unconsciously caught the sweetly-accented sounds of girlish laughter. Mind, Spangles was devoid of clothes, you will bear in mind, and was a man without guile, one like Joseph of old—of whom you have doubtless heard, how he wrenched himself from a vile creature who sought to entice him to sin. An injury? No; not for Joe, was his timely motto. [Where did we leave Spangles, Jimmy? "You left him a-standing onto his head in eighteen feet of water, and the voices of girls a-fallin' upon the midnight air." Well, Dick would have reconnoitred had he had time; but close upon the musical voices of these water-nymphs came a group of Hebes! Dear, dear! They were a-tossing, and a-splashing, and seeing how high they could jump, and things like that. [Yes, right in the water, as we have told you.] But they hadn't yet seen the monster, you will remember; but he, being awful modest, and being dreadfully frightened at his un ward sight, did look for a haven of refuge, where he might sweetly breathe his life out, if we mistake not. A timely bunch of sea-weed, peeping above the turbulent waters, did greet his upturned gaze; he went for it, and, sinking himself to the very chin, he remained in fearful trepidation behind this friendly bunch. He thought he would wait in his ambush until the nymphs should hasten to the mossy banks, and hie them to their homes. Alas! no. They kept on a-plunging and a-shouting, and a-scattering of the liquid drops in a silvery shower. All of a sudden one of them beheld a round, white object peering above the water [Can't you wait, Jimmy? You'll learn soon enough whether or not it was Spangles' bald head.] Then she cried, in her innocence: "O see! what a pretty rock! I'll be Undine for you!" She was about springing for the object when lo! with a mighty surge the manly form of Richard Spangles cleft the waters amain, as the frightened fairies scampered ashore to tell the story of the monster, and to seek aid for its capture. ["Did they dress them selves first?" Why, of course they did. "Did you go back and catch the minny you were after?" No, Jimmy; we had enough of fishing for that day].....At one of our theatres, a few evenings ago, the dresser of the leading lady was greatly incensed because the low comedian called her a vile drug. He afterward excused himself by saying he meant to call her a belle adorner!..... Jim wants to know why those theatres that advertise "standing-room only" don't "git some cheers!".....Miss Braddon had no allusion to the stage-director of Wallack's when she wrote a rover Fred! Mr. F. does not rove unless much provoked....To return to our muttons, as the French people say, the popularity of Lamb, the Brooklyn comedian, is no doubt due to the fact that he is a quaint Ed, with so many people.....Business being rather slack with sideshow showers, the gentlemen may find their opportunity this Fall in the political arena.....Managers have no reference to card-players when they advertise for parties to play straight business; nevertheless, they wish their players to be good cards.....There are two Peak's Bellringers in the field, but whose Peak's first we have yet to learn.....Were you ever an inmate of a theatrical boarding-house? If not, you have missed a rich treat. Such a mixed assemblage is not to be found in any other place of abode. To say that the boarders make things lively for the landlady as well as for one another, is to speak, sooth, in a very mild form. Perhaps in verse we can better convey our impression of life in

THE THEATRICAL BOARDING-HOUSE.

We've ambitious lady-singers,
Who create a fearful din
By attempting "Casta Diva"
To a tinkling violin;
We have also "Dancing Brothers,"
Who, to exercise their powers,
Will perform on the "double shuffle"
At the most unholy hours.
There are fascinating "premieres,"
In a scarcity of clothes,
That can endure for twenty minutes
On the summit of their toes!
We have brave and daring gymnasts,
Scorning danger and a fall,
Who are not the least bit airy,
Though they're oft above us all.
There are "Marrionette" performers
Who are rather fond of noise—
There are people who imitate the ladies,
And the girls who "do" our boys.
We have merry Celtic singers
From the country of the bog,
With "Monarchs of the Bangs,"
And "Princes of the Clog."
We possess a "Lightning Changeist"
Who's a master of disguise,
And we boast a "Dancing Spider"
Who will leap to clutch the flies;
We've a daring "Champion Swimmer,"
Who declares it quite a joke
To recline beneath the water,
Though it might turn out a choke!
Ventriloquists amusing
Around us we've their freaks—
We've a host of "Female Minstrels"
And a stock of "Dutch Comiques."
We have men who cork their faces
(Though the cork is light, it blacks)—
If they meet a good idea,
They will hatch it in their acts!
There's a chap who swallows daggers—
Sensible way he's much adopted—
And a man who whirls a musket
Though he must get very tired!—
Of all city wondrous people
A column could not tell,
But they give their best performance
When they hear the dinner-bell.

CITY SUMMARY.

MR. JOHN BROUGHAM desires to be set right before his friends and the public (though the public are his friends, for that matter) touching our recent allusion to his little address at the opening of the regular season of the Fifth-avenue Theatre. It is scarcely necessary for Mr. Brougham to "rise to explain," for no one supposes that he would, knowingly, publish a libel of anyone, much less of his friends of the press. We cheerfully give place to the appended communication:

SEPTEMBER 23.

EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.—You will, I trust, pardon me if I do not feel inclined to rest under the imputation of having insulted the critics of New York by designating them as "pigmies" in my opening rhymes at the Fifth-avenue Theatre. The mediocrity of the Gallery is acknowledge; but perhaps some slight excuse may be offered for its defects in the fact that it was written and committed to memory within three days; the task, moreover, being sandwiched in between our dinner to Mr. Geo. Fawcett Rowe, at which I presided, and the breakfast to Barry Sullivan at Delmonico's, where I was a guest—keeping me tolerably busy, physically and mentally. If the writer of your preliminary article to the dramatic columns will take the trouble to look closer at the address, he will find—unless I have been unconsciously obscure—that the comparison between "giants" and "pigmies" had application to the dramatists of the Elizabethan era, and those of a later period. It would be matter of deep regret to me if, by any ambiguity of phrase resulting from hurried composition, my language could be construed into an ungracious and ung ate ful reflection upon people from whom I have ever received nothing but the most generous forbearance, and the kindest consideration at all times.

Yours, etc.,
JOHN BROUGHAM.

A STEADY INCREASE IN THE ATTENDANCE at the Park Theatre attests the people's appreciation of the comical characters which Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence have created in "The Mighty Dollar." Both the Hon. Bardwell Slote and Mrs. Gilfinry are getting gradually riper and mellower by frequent repetition, and now may be likened to the plastic clay receiving the few finishing touches from the hands of the sculptor.

BUSINESS is steadily improving with the San Francisco Minstrels. The variations in the programme have been "Fading Away," well sung by C. Warde, and "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane," in which the silvery tones of D. S. Wambold's voice were heard to much advantage; a cornet solo by Arthur Bent; and "Dreaming Eyes of Long Ago," sung by Ricardo, who was attired in female costume. Birch and Bach-us, with their witticisms, kept the audience in good humor, and Add Ryman's stump-speech and Billy Carter's comical sayings and banjo-songs were notable features.

MISS GUSSIE DE FORREST was married, at "The Little Church Around the Corner," on Aug. 8 last, to Louis K. Peck of the firm of W. H. Peck & Co., produce dealers in Washington Market.

STANLEY MCKENNA, a well-known journalist, has become the business-manager of the Lyceum Theatre.

JOHN DILLON, the popular Western comedian, is in town, and will shortly fulfill an engagement at the Park Theatre.

MLLE. TITIENS, MAX MARETZEK and John McCullough arrived from Europe in the steamship Adriatic on Sept. 25.

R. M. FIELD, manager of the Boston (Mass.) Museum, is in town.

MRS. SANDS, wife of Dick Sands, the well-known clog-dancer, was robbed of a pair of diamond bracelets, together with a gold watch and chain, on Saturday morning last, while temporarily absent from her house.

"MADAME L'ARCHIDUC" was withdrawn from the Lyceum Theatre after Friday, a bill comprising opera-bouffe, comedy and vaudeville being presented on Saturday evening, including Offenbach's "Les Deux Aveugles," performed by Messrs. Darcy and Duplan; "Mme. Bertrand and Mlle. Raton," a comedy-vaudeville, including in the cast M. Schmidt, Miles. Lucie Faye and Dupare, their first appearance in comedy; and Offenbach's opera-bouffe "La Rose de St. Fleur," in which MM. Darcy, Castel and Mlle. Hosdes sustained the several roles. "La Fille de Mme. Angot" will be presented this evening, Sept. 27, and is announced for this week only. Mlle. Geoffroy will express the leading role of Clairette.

MISS ANTOINETTE STERLING has returned from Europe.

EDWIN BOOTH'S engagement at the Fifth-avenue Theatre has been postponed from Oct. 4 until the 18th, in consequence of the injuries sustained by him in his late accident having proved more serious than at first was anticipated.

COLONEL GROVER, manager of Frank Frayne's Rifle-team, passed through this city Sept. 27.

THE KELLOGG ENGLISH-OPERA TROUPE begin a season of twelve evening and two matinee performances at Booth's Theatre Oct. 11. The leading roles will be filled by Miss Clara Louise Kellogg, prima-donna, and the artists who were heard during the last season in the repertory of operas presented by this company; and in addition, Miss Annie Montague, and also Mr. and Mrs. Seguin, who did not appear with the troupe during the last engagement in this city, will be of the company during the present season.

FOR THE WEST INDIES.—T. L. Connor and wife, J. F. Kilbourne and wife, Thomas Walker, and Mr. Gregory sailed for Kingston, Jamaica, on Sept. 25. They were engaged through Col. T. Allston Brown's Dramatic Agency to go to Wm. Holland's Company.

GEORGE METKIFF will act the character of Phineas Fogg in "Around the World" at the Academy of Music, commencing Sept. 27, in the place of W. J. Fleming, retired.

PROF. LAWRENCE'S TROUPE of Golden Statue Artists are to appear at the Metropolitan Theatre this week.

PROF. O'REARDON, Harper and Stansill and Harry Munroe are to be the new faces at the Olympic Theatre Sept. 27.

F. S. CHANFRAU in "Kit" will constitute the star attraction at Wood's Museum at the evening performances this week.

THE KELLOGG English-opera Company, for the present season, will include Clara Louise Kellogg, Jennie Van Zandt, Zelda Seguin, Annie Beaumont, Annie Montague, William Castle, Joseph Maas, William Carleton, William Hamilton, Henry Peakes, Edward Seguin, James G. Peakes, W. Morgan, A. Cayla, and W. Marson. S. Behrens will be the conductor; James G. Peakes, stage-manager; and C. D. Hess, manager.

AUGUST RÖHRER, at present performing at the Tivoli Theatre, this city, was married on Sept. 23 to Miss Sarah Rossi, one of the ballet ladies. After the evening performance the happy pair were serenaded by the attaches of the theatre.

MRS. PETER HYNES, aunt of the "Only" Leon of Kelly & Leon's Minstrels, died in this city Sept. 28.

DRAMATIC.
Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others

Are respectfully requested not to extend any courtesies or information to persons claiming to be correspondents of THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, unless they can exhibit a card of a LILAC COLOR, with an engraving of THE CLIPPER BUILDING on one side, and on the other the names of the city, correspondent, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of Sept. 1, 1875, affixed thereunto, each card running for six months. Every authorized correspondent is supplied with a card of the above description, and has no authority to use any other upon our behalf. Managers will save themselves from imposition by demanding an exhibition of the card, and refusing to accept any excuse whatever for its non-production. The card is not transferable; and, if it be presented by any person other than the one whose name it bears, managers and others will confer a favor if they will retain it and mail it to this office.

Persons applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider SILENCE A NEGATIVE.

W. J. FLORENCE has purchased from the author, H. J. Byron, through his agent, T. H. French, the comedy of "Our Boys," with the sole right of producing it in the cities mentioned in the cards in another column. He will present the comedy during the coming season, and also his present character drama of "The Mighty Dollar."

MISS JANE PARKER, comedy old woman, can be engaged by addressing as per card.

SELDEN LEWIS, manager of the Selden Irwin Combination, informs managers that he has secured the right of producing "The Big Bonanza" in the West and South and can be communicated with in regard to its production at his advertised address. Several good people are wanted for the combination.

MISS SUSAN DENIN, supported by Morris & Whitley's Dramatic Company, is to perform in Fairfield, Ill., Sept. 28, Pontiac, Mich., 29, 30, Oct. 1, 2, Janesville, Wis., 4.

THE NEW ORLEANS PANTOMIME TROUPE, under the management and proprietorship of James Keefe, includes Charles A. Wells, clown; Holbrook and Hughes, song-and-dance and double clog; the Leon Brothers, gymnasts; Billy Hitchcock, child contortionist; Harry Mortson, statue - cloggist and song-and-dance; Harry Butler, Dutch comedian; Nellie Sanford, serio-comic; Lizzie La Tour, ballad-ist; John E. Hassett, leader of orchestra; Woodward Vananda, leader of brass band; Prof. Wm. Hutchinson, Thomas Fish, W. S. Chapin and George Bryant. James Keefe is the general performing agent, T. A. Toole press agent, and E. Kinny programmer. Route: Waterville, N. Y., Oct. 1, Sherburne 2, Norwich 4, Oxford 5, Oneida 6, Rome 7, Watertown 8, Ogdensburg 9.

LILLIE ELDRIDGE entered upon a week's engagement at Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., on Sept. 26, on which occasion she appeared for the first time on any stage, her new play, entitled "Tempted," writes our correspondent on the 22d, continuing: "The plot is that Dr. Stanley, a retired New York physician, discovers a little child in a foundling hospital, and, taking a fancy to her, adopts her. She grows to be an accomplished, beautiful woman, and at the age of twenty the Doctor proposes marriage, and she (Helen) from a sense of gratitude consents, although she is passionately in love with a young man, Clarence Tracy. During a visit to Saratoga, Clarence calls on Helen and declares his love. Helen remonstrates with him and just at the instant he is leaving her the Doctor enters and discovers them. This event, together with a letter which his sister Rachel intercepts from Clarence, causes the Doctor to resolve on a separation, and on so informing Helen she demands that their child go with her. At midnight Helen tries to escape with the child, but is discovered by Rachel, who alarms the household and thus defeats her escape cut off. During the excitement, and while the Doctor is trying to force Helen to give up the child, a pistol is discharged, and the Doctor falls dead. The Doctor, in his will, disowns his wife, and leaves his property to a nephew, Thomas Newton. The police search for Helen, to arrest her for the murder of her husband, and they find her at the death-bed of her child, who dies as she is dragged away to prison. She is shortly afterwards tried for murder, and found guilty. Clarence finds out, from a poor old man named Ralph Lee, that, on the night of the murder, he and Newton had forced an entrance into the house, and that Newton was engaged in changing the will, when the Doctor rushed in the room, while looking for his child, and that then Newton fired the fatal shot. A new trial is had, and Helen acquitted. Ralph Lee produces the real will, which makes her sole heir, and he also declares himself to be her father. The piece is in five acts, and the incidents follow one another in quick succession to the denouement, and the plot is so conducted as to leave the moral sharply defined. It contains many good situations, and, with some little pruning, is likely to prove a success. Considering the small number of characters Miss Eldridge has given to the part of Helen, she portrayed it very well, and was repeatedly encored. Owing to the embarrassments attending an initial performance, the company failed to appear to advantage, no one being entitled to special mention. Jack McCullough appeared on the 27th for one week."

BRIDWELL'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC, New Orleans, La., opened its doors for the season on Sept. 19 to a large and appreciative audience. Our correspondent, under date of 22, says: "With this event the amusement season commenced, the Academy, true to its custom for many years, being the first to open, as well as the last to close. Sheridan and Mack introduced their company on the occasion in the musical and medley comedy entitled 'Mimica,' a play—if so it may be styled at all—with an exceedingly attenuated plot, calculated to display the various specialty accomplishments of the several members of the company. Dressed off with a fair degree of taste, the piece went well received. Belle Howitt was greeted on her entree with an enthusiastic recognition by her many friends in the audience, made while filling a very acceptable engagement with the St. Charles stock company some years ago. The other ladies of the company are Alecia Jordan and Rose Lee, the former of whom will remember to have been in engagement last season. Supporting Messrs. Sheridan and Mack are Walter Bray and J. D. Kelly, whose performances were well received. The engagement of Sheridan and Mack continues for two weeks, and, leaving here, they show one week at Galveston, then three days at Houston, two at Austin, and three at Dallas. Salisbury's Troubadours will follow them at the Academy."

CINCINNATI DRAMATIC NEWS to Sept. 24 is furnished as appended by our correspondent: "At the Grand Opera house the Vokes Family opened on Monday in The Belles of the Kitchen,' which was played four nights and Wednesday's matinee, 'Wrong Man in the Right Place' being given the remainder of the week. The business has been very good. Prices were raised fifty per cent., and yet 'Standing-room Only' was the nightly announcement. Prior to the Vokeses' entertainment Messrs. Roche, Fisk, Bradley, Miss De Forrest, and Mrs. Grattan played in capital style 'Naval Engagements.' The Vokeses will remain a second week. On the 4th of October comes James Lewis, and on the 11th Lillie Eldridge in a new society play written by C. E. Callahan, called 'White Sulphur.'.....Wood's Theatre is occupied this week by Hi Henry's Minstrels. On the 27th 'The Naiad Queen' is to be brought out, for a two weeks' run, in grand style, with Bonfanti and Cora Adrians as dancers. Baker and Farron follow on the 11th.....At Robinson's Opera-house Robert McWade began on Monday a two weeks' season of 'Rip Van Winkle,' supported by a portion of the Grand Opera-house Company, noticeable among whom were Messrs. Southard and Meade, Miss Lee and Mrs. Kneas. Business so far has been rather slender.....Mr. C. E. Callahan of this city has just completed for Miss Minnie Palmer a new four-act drama entitled 'Little Silver,' which will be first produced in Pittsburg Nov. 1."

A FIRST OLD MAN, juvenile man, a few responsible people and a leader of orchestra are wanted for the Katie Putnam Combination, for a season commencing Oct. 18. Address as per advertisement.

AT THE THEATRE ROYAL, Montreal, T. C. King in Shakespearian plays drew good houses last week. On Sept. 25 W. M. Ward took his benefit, and Henry W. Michel takes his on the 27th, when the season closes.

FRANK DE VERNON, the juvenile man of F. E. Aiken's Dramatic Company, seceded in Grand Haven, Mich., on Sept. 10.

THE KIRALFY BROTHERS, it is stated, have secured a lot of land opposite the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Pa., upon which they intend erecting a building for amusements, to be managed by them during the Centennial Exposition. They are trying to induce Wagner to come to America.

MISS CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN is said to be so feeble that she requires constant attendance.

FRED G. MAEDER, stage-manager of the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., advertises that he will attend to literary labor as usual, and offers plays for sale.

IDA REMA in McCloskey's play of "Ouah" opens at Baltimore, Md., Sept. 27, Washington, D. C., Oct. 4, Jersey City, N. J., and Albany, N. Y., to follow.

MR. AND MRS. J. R. HEALY, leading or heavy and old women, can be engaged through their agents, Simmonds & Wall, who advertise.

W. HARRY EVERETT, the comedian, whom we reported in our past issue as having been stricken by paralysis at Steubenville, O., on Sept. 13, died at the St. Nicholas Hotel, in that city, at two o'clock Sunday morning, 19, having continued from the time of his first attack in an unconscious condition. During his illness he received every attention which medical skill and friendly care could suggest. Although the engagement of the Wallace Sisters' Company compelled them to proceed upon their tour, arrangements were made by Manager Dobson insuring him the best of care. His remains were buried in the cemetery of that town, the funeral having taken place on Monday afternoon, Sept. 20, at 2 o'clock. Mr. Everett was a good, sterling actor, and had been for many years before the public, holding the position of principal low comedian in the best theatres of the West. He was very popular in Memphis, Tenn., Nashville, and St. Louis, Mo. He acted in the latter city the past season, at De Bar's Opera-house. He was always so reticent about his private affairs that his most intimate friends knew nothing about his relatives.

AT MRS. MORRISON'S GRAND OPERA-HOUSE, Toronto, Ont., the officers and company this season are as follows: Mrs. Morrison, manageress; John Nickinson, business manager; W. S. Davis, treasurer; John Tryon, scenic artist; E. H. Moore, leader of the orchestra; J. R. Grismer, leading; A. R. Roberts, juveniles; W. G. Davis, heavy; M. B. Curtis, low comedy; J. H. Sambrook, second comedy; C. P. De Groat, old men; Joseph Gobay, second old men; C. W. Stokes, walking gentlemen; G. H. Semblar and P. M. Allison, utility; Charles Nickinson, stock star; Mary Davenport, leading; Emily Delmar, juvenile; Mary Carr, old women; May Preston, second old women; Mrs. Marlowe, soubrettes; and Julia Davis, walking lady.

KATE CARSON and Carrie Wagoner were married on Sept. 10.

ALICE DUNNING and Dickie Lingard sailed for Australia from San Francisco, Cal., on Sept. 13.

COL. WOOD'S MUSEUM, Philadelphia, after remaining closed one week for the purpose of renovating and redecorating, reopened Sept. 27 for the Fall and Winter season with a stock company, consisting of the following: Mrs. N. C. Forester, Mrs. Louisa Moore, and the Misses Florence Ellis (Sappho), Emma Stone, Emma Wellesly, Abby Ware, Emma Lee, Clara Pennoyer, Hettie Fulton, Stella Perry, Jennie Burns, Ada Wernell, Julia Arnold, Carrie Jones, Nellie Hyde and Julia Peterson; Messrs. N. C. Forester, Edwin F. Thorne, Wm. Davidge Jr., G. O. Morris, Augustus Pitou, R. G. Wilson, J. R. McEvoy, J. H. Reynolds, Harry Lacy, James Brooks, A. F. Hutchins, B. H. Horning, S. R. Norman, B. A. Altemus, Frank Jordan, G. Fitzgerald, Inez Lewsbury, E. R. Walker, Carl Schineman, T. L. Strong, F. Muter, J. Doering, and W. C. Oberest. C. H. Morton will be the stage-manager, D. T. Morgan musical director, and A. J. Hoyt scenic artist. The programme for the opening performance will consist of Sir Frederick Lyster's eccentric comedy entitled "3,000,000 of Money," which will be presented for the first time in America.

FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE, Philadelphia, during the week ending Sept. 25, attracted an excellent attendance. The new faces were Miss Ione Lang, Mlle. Beretta, Miss Charlotte M. Stanley, Signor Aldine, Charles A. Gardner, Billy Carroll and Japanese Tommy. Miss Lang's serio-comic vocalism met with much applause. Gardner and Billy Carroll, whose specialties are well known, appeared to great advantage in a new sketch entitled "Love under Difficulties." Signor Aldine's musical clown act, Japanese Tommy's amusing lecture on "Woman's Rights," and Mlle. Beretta's trained dogs and birds, were also well received. Mi

Rogers as May dressed elegantly and acted well. Clara Maeder and Jennie Gourley as Miss Champney's and Belinda were respectively expeditious and clever. The small parts of Kempster and Poddles were well rendered. The drama is announced for repetition during the whole of the coming week, and until further notice. On Sept. 27 a new scale of prices is to be ad-opted at this establishment. Since the war there has been no real reduction of prices in theatricals, and Mr. Cheney, with his usual foresight, sees not only the necessity, but the wisdom of a proper respect for his patrons' purses. The general admission is to be fifty cents; orchestra and balcony, one dollar; balcony circle, seventy-five cents; balcony boxes (holding six), five dollars; mezzanine boxes (holding four), three dollars; family circle reserved, forty cents; admission, twenty-five cents. Thus brings the Globe prices pretty nearly the same with those long established at the Museum, which latter house has enjoyed unusual prosperity all along, because of the admirable entertainments it gives at really moderate prices. .....At the Museum "The Rivals," showing a slight falling-off in attendance, was withdrawn after Wednesday evening, and "Men of the Day" substituted. The latter was played Thursday and Friday evenings, and Saturday afternoon. To-night "Richelieu" is to be presented, and on Monday "The Irish Heiress" will be brought out. "East Lynne" is to be played Saturday night, and Tom Taylor's "Clancarty" produced on the evening of Oct. 4. "The Geneva Cross" is underlined for revival. Hettie Tracy has withdrawn from the company.....At the Boston Theatre, Lotta opened on Sept. 20 in her dual role of Little Nell and the Marchioness, supported by Mr. Locke as Dick Swiveller. Both star and drama are too well known to need comment. Business good. "Zip" will be played all next week, and "Musette" the following week. Harry Sheridan opens an engagement Oct. 11.....At the Howard, Frank Frayne opens Sept. 27 in "Si Slocum," supported by the company from the Providence (R. I.) Opera-house.

FROM CHICAGO, Ill., we are in receipt of the appended report of amusements, dated Sept. 25:

Business during the week has been good at our different theatres, with the single exception of the new Chicago Theatre, where it is, unfortunately, always light. The theatre-going people of the Garden City fail to appreciate this beautiful little theatre and its excellent company. "Pauline" was brought out last week in good style, and "ran up to Wednesday of this week, when "The Two Orphans" was put on with the regular stock company. The piece went remarkably well for a first night, and there was a slight increase in business. "The Two Orphans" will run through the whole of next week.....Since the production of "The Two Orphans" at the Adelphi by the McKee Rankin Troupe. The company is a superior one, and the characters are with two or three exceptions, well sustained throughout. McKee Rankin and Kittie Blanchard are playing Jacques and Henrietta, while Frank Pierce and Charles Vandenhoff are playing the same parts they did at Hooley's some weeks ago, and in the same intelligent manner. Sam W. Piercy, an old favorite at the Adelphi, was good as the Chevalier de Vaux, and very well received a here welcome. T. B. Baker hit the part of Picard hard, and has made himself a decided favorite. Mme. Ivan Michels was scarcely up to the standard as Mother Frochard. Her make-up and delivery left a little to be desired. The piece was well mounted, and the scenery new and correct. The audiences have been large all the week. The olio was entirely withdrawn. On Sept. 22 Shook & Palmer's New York agency applied to the United States Court here for an injunction to restrain Leonard Grover, McKee Rankin, Cole, et al., from playing the Two Orphans." Blind Tom opened in Chicago on the 20th. The case did not have a hearing until the 24th, when it was postponed until some future date, Rankin giving bonds not to play the piece here before that time. Tom played to a full house at night, "whipped the devil round the stump" by playing the English version, which had been rehearsed for the occasion. "The Two Orphans" is announced for repetition next week.....At McVicker's "Running a Corner," a localization by a young newspaper man of this city, is in its second week. The play is full of local hits and events, and is growing more attractive, judging from the increase this week, having been the best of the season. "Running a Corner" will hold the stage until the 30th, when it will give place to "The Sea of Ice."

At the Museum the stock company have acted in "Caste," "East Lynne" and "The Irish Lion." The attendance has been large, especially so at the matinees, made up, however, almost entirely of country people, who are here in large numbers to visit the Exposition. The same pieces are announced for next week. Charles McManus is in his element, and is the leading man in a number of the Museum company, opening week after next in "Led Astray." He will be very welcome, the present company being weak and much in need of a few good additions.....The Thalian Dramatic Association closed the Academy of Music on September 18, after a week's bad business. They went hence into Michigan.....At the Academy of Music, Nick Roberts' Jack and Jill Pantomime Troupe opened Sept. 20, and have done a fair business through the week. The regular season will be inaugurated on September 27 with Mr. McFarlane's drama of "Smoke." The following is a list of the new company, almost all of whom are unknown here: Miss Nellie Jones, Miss Millie Sackett, Mrs. H. Ryner, the Misses Ella Maravein, Jennie Ferris, Mamie Bolter, Maggie Orcutt, Jennie Bearn, Lulu Maddern: Messrs. Harry R. Paige, Jas. Williams, Neil Gray, John Ferris, Harry Ryner, F. B. Murray, W. Ogrome Nankeville, Wm. Oliver, E. B Howard, Maurice Pike.

"HENRY V" was produced for the first time in Baltimore, Md., on Sept. 20, at Ford's Opera-house, before a very large and enthusiastic audience, which may be said of the attendance on each subsequent evening. The mountings of the stage were very fine, the scenery and all the necessaries being substantially the same as that used during its presentation at Booth's Theatre, New York, last season. Our correspondent says, under date of Sept. 26:

The King Henry of Mons. Rignold was a beautiful piece of acting, his walk, gestures and manager being in thorough keeping with the character. Mr. Rignold has proved himself to be a most powerful actor, and he comes in for rounds of applause every night. Frederick Thorne as Fluellen was also very clever, his Welsh being wellnigh perfect. There were several other well-acted parts in the play, but space will not permit of a more extended review. "Henry V" will be continued four nights next week, and on Friday night "Amos Clark" will be substituted. E. T. Stetson in "Beggars on Horseback" constituted the dramatic feature of the week at the Holliday-street Theatre, and was but moderately successful. The cast included J. H. Howard, J. H. Stoddart, J. P. Ward, Harry Pearson, J. H. Banks, C. Harkinson, Dollie Lynn, Violetta Campbell, Georgie Dickson and Lydia Denier. Prior to the drama, in the farce of "That Blessed Baby" was presented. "Neck and Neck" was substituted on Friday. Rens opens 27. The new features at the Front-street Theatre were George Evans, Frank Wood, Wm. Wheatley and Maggie Cronin, who, though suffering with a cold, was accorded a flattering reception. In the drama Mr. France introduces his two dogs Bruno and Don Cæsar, who are moderately well trained. In "Wide Awake," J. H. Stoddart, C. B. Fiselle, Geo. S. Edeson, W. M. Frazier, Annie Chester, Miss Wilda and Fannie Prestige were among those deserving of commendation. The departures 25 were Fattie Stewart, the Boisset Family, Harry Macarthy and Delehanty and Cummings, announced for 27: Sam Devere, the Vaida Children, Weslyn and Casey, and the drama "Out in the Snow." Geo. R. Edeson is to have a benefit Oct. 5. Business good.

THE BROOKLYN THEATRE was reopened for a preliminary season on Sept. 20. Shook & Palmer and Business-manager Hart Jackson are to be congratulated on the auspicious reception extended to them on the opening night by the presence of a large and appreciative audience. The attendance in numbers remained unchanged all the week. The Colville English-opera Company have occupied the boards since the opening, and will continue to do so up to and including Oct. 2. Julia Mathews has appeared in the same round of characters as portrayed by her during her recent engagement in New York, supported by the same artists, orchestra and chorus. The presentation of the operas at the Brooklyn has been fully equal to, if not superior, in the way of stage-setting, to that given at Wallack's. "The Grand Duchess" was sung on Monday and Tuesday; "Giroflé-Girofla" at the matinee of Saturday; also the evenings of 22, 23, 25. Miss Matthews received a benefit on Friday night, she appearing on that occasion in her favorite role of "Boulotte." To-night, the 27th, the company will present, for the first time in this country, Lecocq's "Pres St. Gervais;" and from the well known liberality and the announced intentions of the management of this theatre, it is evident that a more fitting opportunity could not have been chosen for the presentation of a new opera, if the success of last week will be repeated again during this. Advices of Sept. 27.

"THE CECILIAN" is the name of a new vocal society recently organized in Philadelphia, and now numbering about two hundred members Michael H. Cross has been chosen as the conductor. Two public performances will be given by the society during the coming Winter, beginning the season with the study of "The Messiah."

THE JULIA MATHEWS English Opera-bouffe Company will play an engagement at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, commencing Oct. 4. They will be under the management of Messrs. Stimmel and Campbell, so long connected with this establishment.

THE MEXICAN Child Opera-bouffe Troupe play at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the evenings of Oct. 15 and 16, and at a matinee on the last-mentioned date.

THE BRASS and string band of the Academy of Music, Cleveland, O., can be engaged by addressing the director, E. A. Garlichs, who advertises.

VARIETY HALLS.

BILLY HART, the popular Irish and Ethiopian comedian, who has been performing in Brooklyn, L. I., for some months past, has met with a severe affliction in the death of his wife on Sept. 21, after a lingering illness of consumption of some eighteen months' duration. Her funeral took place on the 23d, and was largely attended. Among the professionals present were Messrs. Wild, Fay, Hughes, Rickey, Barney, Moreland, Delehanty, Cummings, Murphy, Mrs. Hughes, Kelly, and the Misses Alice Somers and Denvil. Mrs. Hart possessed sterling qualities which endeared her to those with whom she associated, and her demise will be sincerely mourned by her friends and acquaintances.

TO BILLY HART.

Your fondest hopes are blasted in their bloom,
And she you worshiped rests within the tomb.
We just can sympathize with friendly hearts and share
Your bitter anguish and your sad despair.
A loss like yours, unknown to all relief,
Claims the free gift of sorrow and of grief.
Comrade and old friend, accept the welcome tear
That hastens to consecrate your loved one's bier.
Mine be the task to sympathy extend,
On my behalf and that of every friend;
In your dread anguish we participate,
And weep in common o'er your darling's fate.
O happy destiny! that marks a time
To summon all to the Eternal clime.
How sweet the hour that to you'll restore
The darling partner that you now deplore!

ALICE BORNES.

AT THE PALACE VARIETIES, Syracuse, N. Y., under the management of Maguire & Armstrong, the following artists are the attraction: Miss Kitty Sheppard, Nellie Clifford, Jessie Robinson, Hattie Horton, Cora Wood, Messrs. H. Butler, Gus Greenwood, Monroe and Lester, D. Wilson, J. Turner and Harry Armstrong. The managers advertise for lady serio-comic vocalists.

TALENT is wanted at the Youngstown (O.) Varieties, ladies especially. See card.

ARTISTS of acknowledged ability are wanted for a variety theatre to open in a few weeks. See card of Box 3, this office.

AT THE BELLA UNION, Cheyenne, W. T., the following were performing at the date of our latest advices—Sept. 18: Annie Chamberlain, Nellie Blanchard, Ella Martelle, Emma Nelson, Nellie Leon, Mollie La Blanche, "the Great" Bernard, Ben Murphy, Tom Parks, Charles Parks, the General, the Leon Family, and James W. Wilson.

THE LENTON FAMILY, gymnasts, now performing at the Theatre Comique, St. Louis, Mo., open at the Metropolitan Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 4, Chicago, Ill., 18, Toledo, O., Nov. 1. They can be addressed for engagements as per card.

FIRST-CLASS SPECIALTY ARTISTS are wanted at the Theatre Comique, Cumberland, Md., and Manager Howe calls the attention of the profession to his card, in which he refers to a rumor circulated in regard to his establishment.

THE WAITE SISTERS—Hattie, Nettie and Emma—commence their third engagement at Trimble's Varieties, Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 27, and open in Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 11. They will be at liberty Oct. 25, and can be negotiated with as per advertisement of Harry Waite.

BILLY BRYANT, late of Yankee Robinson's show, is requested to send his address to Ed. Cullen, who advertises.

THE WESTON SISTERS—Flora and Jennie—return to America at the conclusion of their London, Eng., engagement, opening at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 11.

NEGRO COMEDIANS, song-and-dance lady, a good cornet player and an agent are advertised for by Manager Lowell of Miss Celia Berger's Lady Minstrels.

HARRY BECKWITH, vocalist and mimic, desires an engagement. See card.

ARCHIE WHITE and Ella Esmond announce their first open date as Dec. 13, and direct managers desiring to negotiate to address them as per advertisement.

AT THE ARCADE THEATRE, Trenton, N. J., George Derious, La Petite Derious, Harry Healy, Carrie Davenport, Thomas Cooper, Mlle. Rosetta, James Moore, Mr. Heard, Louisa Montague, and William Sherrington performed during the past two weeks, and they inform us that Mr. Huber, the manager, left town, taking with him the entire receipts of money, and leaving the above-named without means to defray their expenses.

MARTINI CHIRIKI, ventriloquist, juggler and wire-performer, who has been confined in an hospital in Boston, Mass., during the past three months for treatment for blindness, has, we are happy to say, recovered his eyesight, and accepted a brief engagement to perform in the neighboring towns.

BREMOND'S GLOBE THEATRE, New Orleans, La., opened on Sept. 20, the house being well filled. Reports of yellow-fever, which, says our correspondent, "were without foundation, deterred many of the members of the company from joining at the date of their engagement; but enough was seen at the opening performance to indicate its general excellence. The theatre is well adapted and fitted for the purposes to which Mr. Bremond proposes to devote it. Charles Howard will have the general management of the stage, and he will also perform in his specialties. Charles Lacome, the old and popular proprietor of the St. Charles Billiard-rooms and Exchange, has secured the barrooms attached to the theatre. On Friday evenings, when the performances are to be rendered attractive to the ladies, drinking and smoking will be prohibited. Among the attractions on the opening night, the performances of King Sarbro upon the tight-rope and in the act called 'A Slide for Life' were received with enthusiastic demonstrations. Sprague and Mack gave a very pleasing exhibition of their accomplishments as song-and-dance men, and the remainder of the bill was well rendered. Mme. Cerito and other attractions are announced for an early appearance."

CHARLEY SHAY'S Quincuplexal Show starts out on its nineteenth annual tour Oct. 4. The company includes Viola Morris, Etta Florence, Kitty Henderson, Flora Miller, the Levantine Bros., G. F. Moore, E. Earle, W. Ashton, W. Tobin, C. Cooper, E. Fisher, J. Spear, G. Race, J. R. Shay, Worden and Mack, C. King, W. Levantine, W. Long, W. Hutchinson, G. Jordan, A. Bean, A. Bliss, J. Kuhn, E. B. Vosburgh and Charley Shay.

WASHBURNE'S LAST SENSATION is to perform in Plymouth, Mass., Sept. 30, South Abington Oct. 1, Brockton 2, Randolph 4, Dedham 5, Natick 6. Business is reported good.

GEORGE LEOPOLD and Mlle. [illegible]line, who have been traveling with Schumann's Transatlantic Novelty Troupe for several weeks in Mexico, were in Lima, Peru, on Aug. 30 last.

FRANK B. CONYERS, H. T. Mudge, Emerson and Clark, Miss Pauline, Nell Conway and T. F. Kerrigan, were added to the company at Trimble's Varieties Theatre, Pittsburg, Pa, on Sept. 20. Walter Bray and Harry Hart were advertised, but were not on deck. The banjo-playing of Mr. Converse is more than ordinarily good, and his singing creditable. The dancing of Mudge was good. Messrs. Emerson and Clark pleased the audience to an unusual degree as song-and-dance-artists, their performances having been enthusiastically redemanded. The song-and-dance of Miss Pauline were good, deservedly well received. The specialties of Messrs. Conway and Kerrigan contributed materially toward making the entertainment enjoyable, their dancing and playing on pipes evoking deserved appreciation. Martha Wren, James Collins and Joe Lang assisted in making the programme a success. Business good. The announcements for 27 are the Waite Sisters, Winona and Leonora Bridges, Sallie Mason, Minnie Seamon, Edna Laurent, Sadie Connelly, Samuel and Maud Senyah, the two Haleys, and Lew and Pauline Parker. Closures 25: Jennie Engle, Martha Wren, James Collins, and Crossley and Elder.....'Pomp, or Way Down South," was put on the stage at the Fifth-avenue Comedy Theatre on Sept. 20, and will run all week. Harry Clifford and Lottie Grant sustain the most prominent parts. Lottie Grant also gives serio-comic songs in the olio preceding the drama. Rice and Morrow, from this locality, I believe, and song-and-dance artists, were new people on the 20th. The Rays—Billy and Maggie—Wm. Devere, and Messrs. Warfield, Conway and Percy were the others appearing in variety business. Lillie Wilkinson, in "Little Sunshine," opens on the 27th. Letter of Sept. 24.

AT THE QUEEN'S THEATRE COMIQUE, Toronto, Ont., the attractions since Sept. 20 have not been so numerous as in the previous week. Morris, Freeman and Ida Manssey, in pantomime; Nellie Nelson, serio-comic vocalist; Ettie Le Clair, song-and-dance; and Johnny Richardson, comedian, are general favorites. Gorman and Kelly announced for 20, failed to come, being "stuck" in Bay City, Mich. Charley Whiting and Lottie Arnett also failed to appear, illness of the lady being the cause. Arrivals on 27 will be the Costellos, male and female gymnasts. Business good. Letter without date.

AT THE THEVOLI, Peoria, Ill., the new people the past week were Mollie Mills, serio-comic, who was received with applause; Lena Leon, a trapeze performer, who did some difficult feats of balancing on the bar; and Wm. Scott (late of Scott and Forrest), who gave imitations and acrobatic clog, and an act of contortion. No departures.

Myers' Opera-house, Memphis, Tenn., was to have been opened Sept. 25 with the following company: Lizzie Harmon, Lottie Estelle, Antoinette Sevoy, Mae Roscoe, Flora Frowley, the Jewell Sisters, the Grinnell Children—Hattie and Bennie—Gilday and Gideon, and Harry Springer.

S. DANIELS advertises for first-class variety performers.

HARRIMAN & HAHN, whose performances are very favorably spoken of by the Baltimore press, are advertised for Wilmington, Del., Sept. 27, Trenton, N. J., 28, New Brunswick 29, Elizabeth 30, Paterson Oct. 1, Newark 2, Bridgeport, Ct., 4, New Haven 5, Middletown 6, Hartford 7. Previous to the 5, 11, 12, Boston communications can be addressed to C. M. W. Hanley, manager, as per card.

MCGALL'S THEATRE, Albany, N. Y., prospered during the past week. Of the new appearances billed for the 20th, Christine Percy failed to connect, and Bonner & Bentley and Emily Soldene failed to give satisfactions, did not appear after the first night. The departures were the La Verdas, to Hartford; the Alnaleys, to New York; Petre Goshan, to New York; and Sallie and Jule Keen, to Buffalo. The announcements for the 27th comprise Mlle. Sanyeah and John Conklin, Harry Montague, Decora and Cheyney Garland, Bryant and Williams, Millie Lester and Belle Williams. Advices of Sept. 26.

ALFRED LESTONE publishes his address and complimentary notices from the Baltimore press in another column.

FEMALE PERFORMERS are wanted at Harry Hill's Variety Theatre. See card.

THE MOBILE (ALA.) VARIETIES opens Oct. 9. Manager G. A. Hippler advertises for talent of all kinds.

THE NEW ARRIVALS at the Summer Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C., Sept. 20, were Alf. Miles and Barney McNulty, comedians; Nellie Leslie, serio-comic; Carrie Gardner, balladist; Herr Schulze, facial artist; Chas. Leslie, jig-dancer; and the St. Felix Ballet Troupe, all of whom met with a favorable reception. The departures Sept. 25 were Herr Schulze, Ella Saunders, Healey and Clapp, destination not known. The announcements for Sept. 27 are Kitty Allyne, Jennie Leslie, Lizzie Byron, Frank Nelson and George France. Mr. France will appear in his drama of "Wide Awake." Stage-manager Alf. McDowell has been seriously ill since the 21st, and confined to his bed.....At the Avenue Theatre business has continued fair. The new appearances on the 20th were Zoe De Forrest, vocalist; McCullough and Friels, in double jig and clog dances; James Welch and Maud Le Moyne, in Irish musical sketches; all of whom met with approval. The departures Sept. 25 were G. W. Wood and May Florence. The announcements for Sept. 27 are Frank Cushman, Moss. Lainer, Ada Richmond, Lillie Francis, and Lizzie Wilson.

AT THE BOYLSTON MUSEUM, Boston, Mass., Nella and the company of last week have appeared afternoon and evening in an excellent olio.

A NEW VARIETY THEATRE is to be opened on Court street, Boston, Mass., to be known as the Palais Royal. We are informed that is to be an elegant, cosy little establishment, to hold about 400 persons.

THE ATTENDANCE continues very good at the Theatre Comique, Providence, R. I. The new faces Sept. 20 were Ella Mayo, a little miss who sings pasably well, and Alice Drayton, a good song-and-dance lady. The departures 25 were the Ifferd Sisters, to Baltimore: T. M. Hengler, to Boston; and Harry Kennedy. The new people announced for 27 are the Ainsleys, Harry Parker and dogs, and Frank Mars.

A NEW VARIETY THEATRE is offered for sale at a bargain by G. R. B., who advertises.

VARIETY TALENT and sensation stars can find engagements at Enochs' Varieties, Philadelphia, Pa. See card.

WORK is rapidly progressing on the new St. James Theatre, now being erected on the corner of Tenth and Callowhill streets Philadelphia. It will be opened on the 8th of November with a first-class variety company, and, as it possesses a superior location, it ought to meet with success.

AT THE GRAND CENTRAL, Philadelphia, the fresh features during the week ending Sept. 25 included the clever banjo-solos of Charles E. Dobson, acrobatic feats by the "Three Tigers," an excellent statue clog-dance by Dewey, Wright and Dewey, and Professor John E. Ince's comic vocalism, and last, but not the least attractive, was the concluding drama of "The Gamecock of the Wilderness," in which G. W. Thompson gave a vigorous and creditable rendition of the role of Sampson Hardihead. The Reynolds Brothers, Frank Lee and Mollie Hunter, the Vernons, the Deveres and John E. Ince closed Sept. 25. The new arrivals are Delehanty and Cummings, and John Williams the "Lancashire Lad." Business good.

THE NEW IDEA, Philadelphia, did a fair business last week, the company including Sam Orme, Kate and Alice Clare, Lew Frazer and Frank Hassall.

AT ENOCHS' VARIETIES, Philadelphia, the management had no cause to complain of the attendance last week. The programme included as fresh features the Zanfretta Pantomime Troupe, Miss Fanny Davenport and John J. Carle. The pantomime "Yoops" served to introduce Zanfretta as Clown and Tom Vance as Pantaloon, and their quaint and humorous antics furnished plenty of amusement. Miss Fanny Davenport is a pretty and pleasing serio-comic vocalist, and John H. Carle a capital banjoist of well-known ability. Miss Alice D'Erina and Charley Kelly closed Sept. 25. Prof. Davis and trained dogs, Crossley and Elder, James O'Neill and Miss Nell West open Sept 27.

CHAS. KOKOLLMAN, Dutch comique, can be engaged by addressing as per card.

TURNER AND ROCHE, comedian, appear at Hartford, Conn., Oct. 4.

TONY A. BELGER, character vocalist and dancer and female specialist, begins an engagement with Chas. Adams' Minstrels, Bucyrus, O., Sept. 27, Washington, D. C., Oct. 18. Dallas, Texas, Nov. 22, Pensacola, Fla., to follow. For open dates he can be addressed care of this office.

THE CENTRAL, Thomas Miller's elegant variety theatre in Troy, N. Y., opens Sept. 27. The following people are billed: J. Brookhouse Bowler, Martha Wren and James Collins, Alice Rhind, Miniature Second Regiment, the Kine Brothers, Hattie Russell, Alice Bennett, the Franklin Brothers, Norton Campbell, Prof. Alfred Gheazzi and dog Dexter, Mollie Phelps and A. R. Phelps, the latter stage-manager. Prof. James Colton is leader of orchestra, which includes Prof. Albert Webb, an ex-Canadian manager, as pianist. Geo. Williams, long of Albany, is machinist and scenic artist. The house has only been open three weeks since completion last spring. There is no wine-room attached.

MME. RENTZ'S FEMALE MINSTRELS are to show in Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 27, Troy 28, Cohoes 29, Springfield, Mass., 30, Worcester Oct. 1, Providence, R. I., 2, and there close the season.

THE SEATING CAPACITY of the Theatre Comique, St. Louis, Mo., was increased on the night of Sept. 18, the occasion being the commencement of the Fall and Winter season. Our correspondent, writing on Sept. 24, says: "The company selected by Manager Mitchell is very good, and has given satisfaction." Sig. Cellini's English ballet troupe takes well. The song-and-dancers Sallie and Fox and the Reynolds Brothers were loudly redemanded. The Lenton Family are very good. Mollie Wilson and Jennie Wade are pleasing vocalists. Miss Ada Laurent appeared to advantage in her mysterious change-dances. Sergt. Burke did a neat drill exercise, as did Mlle. Emma Sadler. Fannie Quane also had to be repeated. During the Summer the house has been in the hands of painters and upholsterers, who have done their work in first-class style. Several new sets of scenes have been painted by T. C. Noxon. Jennie Eagan and Josie Farron, specialty dancers, make their first appearance on Sept. 26. No departures ..... Chas. T. Ellis, Dutch comedian, put in an appearance at Deagle's Theatre 19, and soon established himself as a favorite. The acts of "The Big Four" never fail to please. Tommy Jefferson did a neat banjo-solo, and the same may be said of the song-and-dance of Lizzie Warren. Adams and Reynolds in a Dutch act, and "The Mixed School" of the Big Four, are the other features of the olio. Sig. Cardella's American ballet troupe appeared for the first time 19, and favorably impressed them favorably into favor. The dramatic feature is J. Z. Little, a good actor, who appears as Roving Jack in the drama entitled 'Saved from the Wreck.' He is well supported by George W. Mitchell, B. J. McLaughlin, Eliza Grassford, Jennie Waterles, and others. Business Sept. 20 to 25 inclusive for Memphis. Leonara Bradley, actress and vocalist, appears 26. Biz good.....At Looney's Varieties business is good, and Manager Allen is happy. A very pleasing feature of the entertainment is the first-part minstrel-scene. Bowman and Cummins, song-and-dance men, were the attraction for the past week. Departures 25: Gilday and Gineven, and the Jewell Sisters, to Memphis; Billy Butler, Bowman and Cummins, and Ettie May. Arrivals 26: The Turner Bros., Billy and Sadie Hasson, Maude De Lisle, Chrissie Morrell, Annie De Lorme, the Sutter Sisters, and Annie Gardner. Wm. Butler and Ettie May were united in the bonds of wedlock on Sept. 20. The ceremony was performed by Justice Walton on the stage, in the presence of the audience. After the happy pair were made one, the performances were continued."

THE ODEON VARIETY THEATRE, Newark, N. J., did a good business the past week. The newcomers were Blanche Selwyn, in character songs, who, being a favorite here, was enthusiastically received; and the Cawthorne Brothers, in their act of the Irish and Dutch Emigrants, whose songs-and-dances were redemanded nightly. Ed. Heeney, being without a partner, doubled up with Harry Shay, and their songs-and-dances were encored. Mr. Heeney's partner, T. F. Thomas, is lying dangerously ill at the residence of his parents, No. 52 North Elliott place, Brooklyn, his trouble being a bronchial affection. Closing 25: J. L. Davis and Nell West, to Enochs, Philadelphia; Sallie Swift, to New Haven; the Bowne & Brothers, Wellington and Clinetop Sisters, Ed. Heeney and Blanche Selwyn. To open 27: Virginia Stickney, serio-comic vocalist; John T. Kelly, Irish character artist; Alice D'Erina, Irish vocalist; Coulter and Goodrich, song-and-dance; and Prof. Leon and his three sons, gymnasts..... At the Metropolitan business has been good. The fresh faces 20 were Lola Rolds, a pleasing vocalist; the Romer Sisters, in songs-and-dances, which were well done and merited applause; Lolo, gymnast, and Chas. Johanoff, Wash Antonio and Geo. Dunbar. The last four are artists of merit, and were well received. Closures 25: Chas. Johnsoff, Geo. Dunbar and Wash Antonio, who go to Miss. 27 to open. Letter of Sept. 24.

MCGALL'S THEATRE, Albany, N. Y., prospered during the past week. Of the new appearances billed for the 20th, Christine Percy failed to connect, and Bonner & Bentley and Emily Soldene failed to give satisfactions, did not appear after the first night. The departures were the La Verdas, to Hartford; the Alnaleys, to New York; Petre Goshan, to New York; and Sallie and Jule Keen, to Buffalo. The announcements for the 27th comprise Mlle. Sanyeah and John Conklin, Harry Montague, Decora and Cheyney Garland, Bryant and Williams, Millie Lester and Belle Williams. Advices of Sept. 26.

ALFRED LESTONE publishes his address and complimentary notices from the Baltimore press in another column.

FEMALE PERFORMERS are wanted at Harry Hill's Variety Theatre. See card.

THE MOBILE (ALA.) VARIETIES opens Oct. 9. Manager G. A. Hippler advertises for talent of all kinds.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Detroit, Mich., on Sept. 20, Barney and Delia Ferguson were the new ones. Their line of business is Irish, both using a good brogue. They also have fair voices, and give satisfaction, although there is room for improvement. The company have inaugurated a ladies' night at the Adelphi on Saturdays, similar to last season, playing the company in both places. Closing 25 are Lucy Adams, Guy Linton, to London, Ont.; Wm. Gaylord, Sheppard and Whitney, Johnny and Kitty Loveland, whose places will be filled on the 27th by J. C. Murphy, J. G. Roome, Tommy and Lottie Winnett, Sig. Elviro, Kirk and Drew, and the Bennett Sisters. Business has been light since the opening of the season. Advices of Sept. 25.

THE NEW PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, L. I., has had no cause to join in the prevailing cry of hard times. Among the features of the programme for the week ending Sept. 25 were Wealyn and Casey in a musical melange, who made a decided hit, and whose return will be gladly welcomed, and H. S. Page, a cornet soloist of considerable merit. The Carrolls appeared in two sketches. Polly Daly was much admired in her serio-comic songs. Lizzie and Harry Braham in one week have taken the patrons of this house by storm, and have established themselves as favorites. Departures: The Carrolls, to Fox's, Philadelphia; Brothers Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Whittingham, with Master Newman, Howard Athenæum, Boston; Wesyln and Casey, the Vaidis Children and Sam Devere, Front-street Theatre, Baltimore, the latter to remain absent four weeks. Arrivals 27: Raynor Bros., J. C. (Tattle) Stewart, George and Charles Reynolds, Emile Goroux and Miss Nellie St. John. Advices of Sept. 27.

W. J. GILMORE, proprietor of the St. James Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., notifies the professon that, in consequence of unfavorable weather, the theatre cannot be completed and ready for opening before Nov. 8. The artists engaged for time previously to this date are referred to his card for particulars.

NOTWITHSTANDING the many attractions in Richmond, Va., the past week, the company at the Theatre Comique played to good houses. Agnes Sutherland, serio-comic singer, opened Sept. 20, and was well received. The following close 25: Ada Wallace, Minnie Mayer and Harry Kenner. The Harry O'Neil Combination are billed for the 27th..... The Grand Central Variety Theatre, under the management of Harry Demont, will open for the season Oct. 1.

SMITH'S OPERA-HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., closed Sept. 25, for five nights. Manager Smith opened the Bay City Varieties 21 with the following company: Chas. O. White, Ed. Chrissie, Chas. L. Banks, Waters and Kelly, Ella Stewe, Amelia Deane, Lillian Howard, Lizzie Shelton, Ella Day, Jenny Livingston and John Kelly, at which place they remained the rest of the week. Manager Smith has arrangements by which he will run the Varieties in Bay City and East Saginaw the remainder of the season.

JOHNSON AND BRUNO, acrobatic song-and-dance artists, now performing at the Olympic Theatre, N. Y., publish a list of their acts in another column.

LANE & WEAVER, dramatic and variety agents, advertise the Empire Children, musical specialists, as open for engagements; also that a partner, with small capital, is wanted; and that ladies and gentlemen can obtain instruction for the stage at the dramatic school noticed in their card.

THE FRESH APPEARANCES at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., on Sept. 20, were Sheffer and Nelson, Emma Stanley, Mlle. Lauretta and Chas. Mathews. The Bennett Sisters were re-engaged for one week longer. Sheffer and Nelson are old favorites here, and were well received. On the 20th the Bennett Sisters and Kirk and Drew go to Detroit; Emma Clifford, Chas. Diamond and Eddie Moore, to Toledo; I. A. Morton and Belle Pauline, to Buffalo. Business good. To open Sept. 27: Den Thompson, Lizzie Mullvey and Emma Sanford.....The Academy of Music has been doing a light business all the past week, with Miss Rena in "Cush" and a variety olio. On the first night of the week the performance was interrupted by Ben Connelly in the cast, who was playing the heavy business, and who was considerably "indisposed." After the first act, Stage-manager Banker went on and read the part. Since that night Mr. Compton of the Opera-house company has acted the role. The variety season at this place consists of a few days yet, and will close on the 25th. Edw. H. Banker returns to Philadelphia; Geo. H. Maxwell and Madeline Hardy, Seaman and Somers, and Add Weaver, to Pittsburg; Bettie Remelsberg, to New York; Barlow Brothers, to Lohisville; Ed. Murray and Alice Ross, to Cincinnati, Oct. 11. Add Weaver goes to Troy, Oct. 11, for the season. E. A. Garlichs advertises for a negro-minstrel troupe, Clifford and Miss Grant were billed for the Academy 27, in "Pomp," which engagement has been cancelled. Letter of Sept. 24.

LINA EDWIN and Bland Holt can be found advertised elsewhere.

THE RAYNOR'S—Harry and Charles—now performing at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., in their specialties have been the recipients of praise from the Boston (Mass.) press, as will be seen in an extract published in another column.

ANDY MCKEE and Steve Rogers, who are now traveling with Tony Pastor's Combination, state that their partnership is now dissolved.

MISS GERTIE GRANVILLE notifies managers, in her card elsewhere, that she will be obliged, in consequence of an accident and the destruction of her cuts, etc., by fire, to cancel her dates, but will be ready shortly to negotiate for time, and can be addressed as advertised.

SADIE AND BESSIE VIVIAN, the former for song-and-dance and banjo-solos, and the latter, who is only four years of age, for serio-comic, can be engaged by addressing as per card.

HUNTLEY, whose address find in another column, would like to hear from managers having open dates.

NELL WEST and Prof. J. L. Davis, with his school of educated dogs, open at Enochs' Variety Theatre, Philadelphia, Sept. 27, for two weeks. Miss West has been quite ill for several days past, but is recovering.

SPECIALTY PERFORMERS are advertised for by WM. B. Smith, proprietor of Smith's Opera-house, East Saginaw, Mich.

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS to Sept. 24 is sent as appended by our correspondent: "At the National Theatre Comique the new appearances this week have been Manchester and Jennings, a brace of excellent song-and-dance men, who have taken well, and the Mendels—Harry and Leonie—Dutch specialists, who are quite clever in their business. The principal feature of the programme has been the burlesque of 'Blackeyed Susan,' with Frankie Lee as William and Lottie Brown as Susan. Business has been fair. The departures to-morrow will be Manchester and Jennings, who join the Emerson Minstrels in Chicago; Turner Brothers for St. Louis; Sadie and Billy Hasson and the Levanion Brothers. New appearances 27: Richards, Rhinehart and Powell, a new gymnastic combination: Little Bertie Rhinehart, serio comic vocalist; John Watson, banjoist; Homer and Holly, song-and-dance; and Lillie Clemens.....At Heilick's Grand Central Theatre, the cancan continues to draw largely, though, as put on here, it has no illicit attractions, and is very, very mild. The only new appearances were Minnie Rainforth, who proved quite an attraction in her zouave drill and vocalisms, and Joe A. Gulick in extemporaneous vocalisms. The closings this week are Marie Nichols for Indianapolis; Jennie Eagan and Josie Farron, for St. Louis; and Johnny Smith, for Louisville. Underlined for the 27th: Annie Hindle."

AT THE CENTRAL THEATRE, Baltimore, Md., business during the week has been fair. The new specialties Sept. 20 were J. W. McAndrews, a good Ethiopian comedian; Minnie Gray, who executed a good song-and-dance; Philip Heath, in ventriloquial exhibitions; and Katie Forrest, who sang in a pleasing manner several popular melodies. The entertainment concluded each evening with W. B. Cavanagh's extravaganza, entitled "The Nymphs of the Caribbean Sea." The departures are J. H. Fitzpatrick and Wm. Carleton, to Philadelphia; the Sanyeahs and Sallie Mason, to Pittsburg; Quilter and Goldrich, to Newark, N. J.; and Alfred Listone, to Washington. To open 27: Charlotte M. Stanley in "Too Late," the Ifford Sisters, Clara Belmont, Mlle. Gabrielle, Mlle. Emma, the Devere Brothers, J. J. Riley, Lena Emily and Fred Siegle, W. H. Vaze, J. H. Bradford and J. G. Rothwell.....At the Odeon, Jennie Leslie and two of the Wood Sisters did not appear, as announced, and Minnie Lee and Louisa Bliss were substituted in their stead. The other new faces were Carrie Woods, C. L. Davis, and Gertie Woodward, the latter giving an exhibition of second-sight reading. Taylor and Mack, two new aspirants for professional honors, made their debut as song-and-dance men, and were quite creditable. Departures: Dody Zanfretta, to Washington; Minnie Lee, to Philadelphia; and Lizzie Byron, to Washington. To open Sept. 29: Clara Moore, Fanny Duane, and Fanny Favre. Business good.....Affairs at the Centennial have not been progressing so favorably as those possessed with any degree of patriotism might wish. There has been some mis

TO THE PUBLIC.
We take this method of returning our thanks to Mr. Montgomery Queen for his kindness in rendering us from our unexpired engagement with his show, that we may accept Sig. Chiarini's offer to visit South America. We cannot withdraw from the company with which we have been so long and pleasantly identified without gratefully acknowledging the elegant treatment we have received from Mr. Queen, his managers and agents. It is with feelings of regret that we take leave of this most agreeable company and associates.
Mr. Queen has always been fair, upright and prompt with us, and we wish him, from the bottom of our hearts, that success in the future which is due to an honorable man.
Very respectfully,
FRANK E. CLIFFORD,
Triple Horizonta-bliar Artist.
